Why is MyLLTsubscription.com your solution?

Because it's intentionally designed to be for EVERYONE!

Can your social media accounts be used for this purpose?

NO. Your authentic life, legacy, and transition records belong in a secure digital vault, even if you have no property or bank account!

The truth of who you are can't be extracted from your social media pages, because those pages don't tell the entire story. In fact, they often tell a non-authentic story.

No one can speak to the obstacles and the victories of your life the way you can. No one can explain how or why your values became your values the way you can. How did you become you? If you would like that type of information to come directly from the source and you value privacy, dignity, and structure, then MyLLT-Subscription is for you.

Why is MyLLTsubscription.com your solution?

Because it's intentionally designed to be for EVERYONE!

The person who works in a risky career wants themselves and their family to know that while they intend to come home everyday until old age takes them, the family is secured once the vault has been filled with all there is to fill it.

The person that wants no fighting over property or belongings, no misstatement of their wishes, no forgery on their beneficiary form, no missing out because no one found the life policy I stuck in the closet.

The person who wants a say so in their transition right down to the photos allowed in their obituary and how their body is handled!

Who knew you would need this info?

Jason's dad was a military man and he didn't know him in his adult life.

Today Jason received a test result and family history of medical conditions related to prostate has become important to him.

It so happens that Jason's dad found it important to notate his MyLLTsubscription with information about prostate related false positives being common in his bloodline and he shared the reason why and gave guidance on what to tell doctors to find the real health condition.

Jason's dad and many others before him didn't understand their health issues until they were in their 40s - 50s.

Jason's dad intentionally gave his future generations of men the gift of sparing them years of unnecessary tests and worry.

In case of emergency - whose in charge?

Who told Tasha that I would refuse a blood transfusion?

Maybe my parents gave that directive when I was age 15, but I'm 30 now and I would absolutely choose a life saving blood transfusion, type AB!

If cousin Tasha gets to the hospital first, Tasha is all the doctors have as a source of information.

Medical history, medications taking, prior surgeries, and blood type can all be life saving information in an emergency situation where you are unconscious.

Your Trusted User(s) will be able provide information to the medical team, regardless of where they are in the world.

Bucket List vs Hyper-responsibility

If you have adventurous items on your bucket list, but hesitate to move forward with the experience, it could be something called hyper-responsibility or decision paralysis.

This is when you feel overly responsible for the emotional state of your family or anticipate that your desire will create a family reaction resulting in anxiety.

MyLLTsubscription:

One of the most responsible, respectable, loving, and powerful things you'll ever do for the people who matter most.

You thought of everything they need to know about you, about protection you have in place for them, you left recorded guidance, photos, and documents. Peace of mind for you. Peace of mind and clarity for them.

Embrace the use of MyLLTsubscription to help you reframe your thoughts, realizing that you may actually inspire your family!

Nonetheless you're here to "experience". If your heart desires an experience, it means you're here for that experience!

Fill your vault and fulfill your bucket list.

The best version of you is responsible, yet unapologetic and guilt free!

Capture culture and final wishes

Family gatherings with food are crucial for strengthening bonds amongst the adults and children.

During these times individuals sit still for long enough to show genuine concern for one anothers well-being.

It's here that culture, values and traditions are reinforced through family stories, fostering a sense of identity.

With that being said, the flavorful seasoning and combinations of food items, are just as important as who shows up for dinner.

In the MyLegacy section of her MyLLTsubscription the 98 year old Nanna had recorded a Dear Loved One message that said:to be read prior to the next family gathering:

To my daughter Sessy whom I love very much. You are the only person I've given my collard greens recipe to. That recipe has been in our family for 300 years, passed down to one or two each generation. My love, I've tasted the result of your hands making those greens and they were okay.

Last year, your first born, Mizza helped me in the kitchen. She told me she had made the greens before, so I stood back and let her make them. It seems hers tasted exactly like mine.

My dear, Mizza has the magic! When I'm gone, Mizza is to be the one who cooks the collards for family gatherings.

In her dismay, Sessy laughed and cried at the same time, but she honored the voice of her mother. It was undeniable and everyone had to respect Nanna's wishes. And so it was!

Cultural Matters

There are many cultures, some more discussed than others, who would say that their true history is different from what is taught in mainstream text books.

Some may feel strongly that their future generations who pursue careers requiring formal education will further cultural erasure, including not understanding their birth right to land, property, and natural resources.

Embrace the use of MyLLTsubscription to preserve details of migration, culture, values, traditions, list of books that future generations should read, and don't forget the recipes!

Some families just don’t!

Families often avoid discussing death due to fear of upsetting loved ones, discomfort with mortality, or a desire to protect others from pain.

This silence, while intended to maintain harmony or reduce stress, can leave families unprepared for end-of-life decisions, causing confusion, resentment, and challenging, chaotic situations during bereavement.

If this is your family dynamic, you’re not alone.

Your solution is in the appstore!

- AVOIDED: Uncomforable conversations!
- AVOIDED: The need to update people if your wishes change
- GAINED: You protected your loved ones in the future, without upsetting them in the now.
- GAINED: You feel responsible, respectable.

Your future cousins, grand neices and nephews say: THANK YOU!

Sometimes we belong to organizations that support our journey and lifestyle. Sometimes these organizations are more supportive and less biased of our desires and decisions than our own families are. MyLLTsubscription helps in a few ways with this:

Future generations experiencing the same type of reaction from the family will view your MyLLTsubscription.

You may leave behind words of wisdom, coping strategies, names of professional counselors, mentors, and lists of organizations you belonged to.

But most of all those family members that never see you in person, will know you and you will be a comfort to them, the same as you would have been if living at the same time.

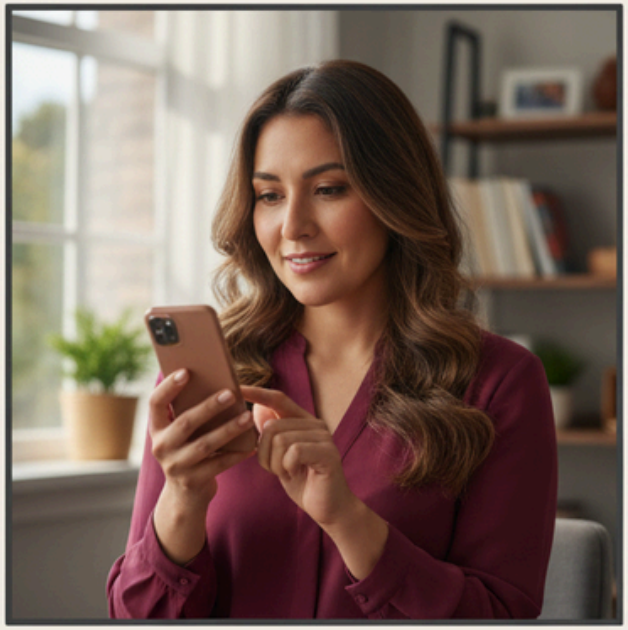

They'll see your photos, hear your voice recordings and it could be their saving grace.

Also, they may choose to support the some of the same organizations you supported.

Continue to do good by the legacy you leave.
