

Glenda Rosenberg, M.Ed. L.P.C.

LIMITS OF CONFIDENTIALITY

I may be required by law to disclose confidential information about you if any of the following conditions exist:

Client Authorization

You can give me written consent to provide information to others (e.g., psychiatrists, doctors, past therapists, family members, etc.) in an effort to coordinate services. If such a time occurs, we will complete and sign an Authorization for the Release or Exchange of Information form.

Imminent Risk of Harm

When there is reason to believe that you may be at imminent risk of harming yourself, others, and/or property, I have the legal and ethical obligation to warn appropriate authorities.

Cases of Abuse and Neglect

When there is reason to believe that a minor, an elderly person, or a person with a disability is in danger of being, or has been physically, emotionally, or sexually abused or neglected, I am obligated by law to report the information to the appropriate authorities.

Orders from Court or Criminal Proceedings

When a court of law orders me to release information, I must comply with such an order. Confidentiality does not extend to criminal proceedings in Texas, so that if you are presently, or will later become, involved in a criminal lawsuit, your file may be opened for court inspection.

Inappropriate Behavior by a Previous Therapist

If you disclose that a previous therapist behaved in an inappropriate manner, then I am legally bound to report it to the District Attorney's office as well as to the appropriate state licensing board. Your identity need not be disclosed if you do not wish it.

I have read and understand the above information, and am consenting to services:
