Q&A

Trina Limpert, CEO & Founder

A passionate business leader known for constructing strategic vision to achieve business goals, Trina Limpert offers a unique blend of experience in strategic diversity experience execution as CEO of RizeNext. In her prior role as President of Women@eBay in overseeing 1500 members across 17 countries and 22 sites, Trina lead diversity and inclusion initiatives across eBay. Her work along with eBay's Women in Technology organization lead to receiving the Women Tech Council Impact Award in 2015, finalist Women Tech Council awards 2017, finalist for the upcoming National Women in IT, New York awards for Rise Up Leadership as "Diversity Program of the Year" and recently selected as one of Utah Business Magazine's "30 Women to Watch".

Mikel Blake, Head of Technical Training & Curriculum

Mikel has been instrumental in RizeNext community programs that assist women in re-entering the workforce and transitioning into technology. She herself was a return to work mom and went through the MotherCoders program in Silicon Valley. Over the last 12 months she has partnered with RizeNext to build these programs across Utah in partnership with multiple universities. This experience helped her gain the skills, guidance, support, and momentum needed to go on and complete a full-time immersive bootcamp at DevMountain. . I am excited to help be — and enable — the support for other women that the MotherCoders community has been to me."

Robbyn Scribner, Director of Community & Corporate Programs

Robbyn has spent her career researching, writing, speaking, and advocating on behalf of women who are navigating the tricky intersection between their professional and personal lives. In today's economy, EVERY woman needs to seek out great education and training, and EVERY woman needs to be prepared to support herself and her family. Robbyn recognizes the tech industry is one of the best places for women to launch flexible, fulfilling, and financially rewarding careers. "Getting more women into and staying in tech careers is ideal for Utah families, and also for our businesses and our state's economy."
