Maxx Systems hackathon app tries to save your diet and ends up saving a life!

During a Maxx Systems App competition in which developers competed to create cool apps for Maxx's "smart fridge", Salvadore Cohantz wanted to win the prize by developing something that keeps you on your diet. It uses advanced body shape detection software to know when dieters are taking snacks from the fridge when they aren't supposed (for example, when Mom is not home from work yet) and sound an alarm or yell "step away from the fridge!" in a deep voice. It even has an option to call someone's cellphone and let them know you're cheating on your diet. The body detection software noticed that a child was not moving after opening the fridge, and sensing an anomaly, called the cellphone specified in the app. The boy had eaten something he was highly allergic to and had gone into shock. The person called dialed 911 and the child was saved. As a result of this event, Maxx management is considering including this app as a standard feature in all its fridges.
