Studies in Flow

Annika Rhea creates contemporary abstract works that explore the movement of energy through line, rhythm, and form. Spanning minimalist compositions, network-based structures, and gestural large-scale works, her practice translates invisible systems into refined visual language designed for contemporary spaces.

Inspired by patterns found throughout nature, movement, and interconnected systems, the works investigate how energy organizes through motion, constraint, and flow. Across each series, abstraction becomes a means of tracing the forces that shape both physical and emotional experience.

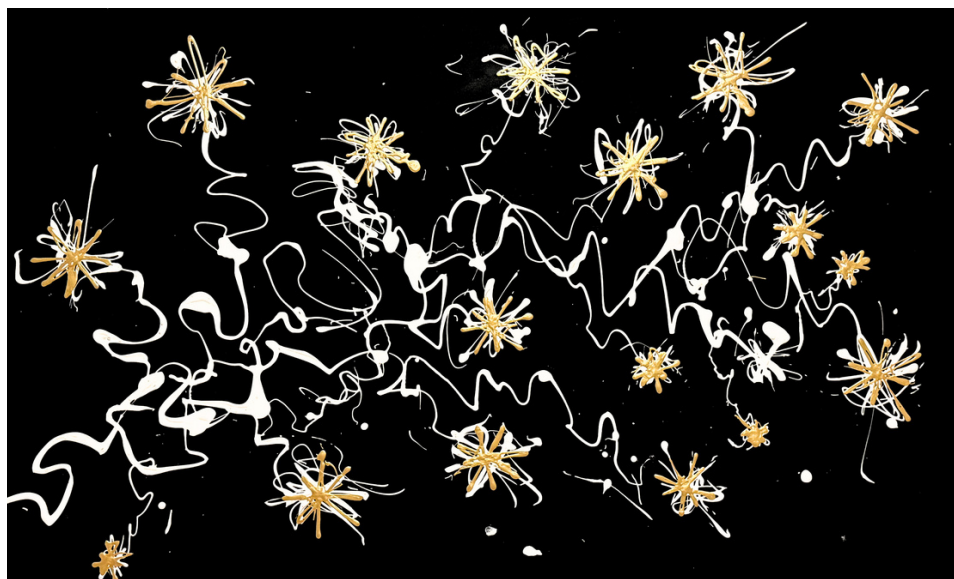

Energetic Patterns

Energetic Patterns explores how patterns emerge across scales, from neural networks to cosmic structures to technological, ecological, and community systems. Each work traces the movement of energy through systems shaped by constraint, where structure is not designed but arises through flow. Gold bursts appear as nodes of activation, while black and white lines ripple like synapses, celestial currents, and channels of data.

The series distills the complexity of these systems into a clear visual language of interconnection. Across physics, biology, and systems theory, structure arises as energy moves through fields shaped by forces and constraints. Without constraint, there is no pattern, only randomness. These works reflect the process by which reality organizes itself, where visible form becomes the trace of invisible forces in motion.

Body Medium

Body Medium is a gestural painting practice in which artist Annika Rhea harnesses the intelligence of movement to create dynamic abstract works. She describes her approach as immersive action painting or dance painting, using her body as both instrument and medium, and the canvas as a stage upon which each composition unfolds.

Rooted in the principles of flow and presence, each painting captures a moment of embodied awareness in motion. The works hold the residue of lived movement, preserving ephemeral gestures and transforming them into lasting forms that invite the viewer to experience energy, rhythm, and spontaneity in a new dimension.

About The Artist

Annika Rhea is a New York–based contemporary artist whose work explores the movement of energy through abstraction, systems, and embodied mark-making. Spanning minimalist linework, network-based compositions, and large-scale gestural works, her practice translates invisible forces into refined visual language designed for contemporary spaces.

Rhea has exhibited internationally, including during Art Basel in Miami and Switzerland, and has presented work with SCOPE Art Fair and EP Gallery in Basel. Her work bridges fine art, movement, and spatial design, with pieces placed in private collections and contemporary interiors internationally.
