Concern over delay

The unusual delay in rendering judgments by the Madras High Court in a large number of cases invited the ire of the lawyers. It is their complaint that the cases reserved for judgment after hearing have not been delivered after lapse of several months. The recent case of the writ petition filed by the former Chief Minister Mr. Jayalalitha and others, challenging the constitution of Special Court to try corruption cases in which the judgment was not pronounced and now another bench requires to rehear the matter on account of the transfer of Mr. Justice D. Raju as the Chief Justice of Himachal Pradesh High Court is cited as an example. Lawyers say that it is essential to fix a reasonable time within which the judges should render judgments after the cases are reserved for judgment. They also feel that such a step would go a long way in ensuring judicial accountability.

Consumer Notes

Sections 21, 35A and 56 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949-Payment of interest on bank deposits-binding nature of RBI directives:

In a recent decision the National Consumer Disputes Redressal Commission [NCDRC] has ruled that the payment of interest by any bank to depositors cannot exceed the maximum rate prescribed by the RBI on any count. A four member bench of the NCDRC observed that "the RBI has the general supervisory control over banks including the co-operative banks similar to the petitioner. This power has been provided under section 56 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949. Under various provisions of the said Act including sections 21 and 35A, the RBI is competent to issue circulars inter alia in public interest and in the interest of banking policy apart from other exigencies".

Maharashtra State Commission had ordered the Petitioner-Konkan Mercantile Co-operative Bank Ltd. to pay the difference of one percent interest on the fixed deposits made by the respondent Abdul Sattar Ahmed Bondre. The difference of one percent interest had resulted on account of the bank having reduced the interest rate from 12 to 11 percent in terms of the RBI circular dated March 31, 1987 which provided that the maximum rate of interest payable after April 1, 1987 on deposits exceeding one year but less than two years would be 10.5 percent plus one percent and not 12 percent. The petitioner had preferred a revision petition before NCDRC wherein it had contended that when they issued the fixed deposit receipts the particular branch at Taluka Shriwardhan, District Raigad was not aware that the RBI had already issued directions reducing the rate of interest on all FDRs issued on or after April 1, 1987. It was also contended that the State Commission was in error in directing the difference in payment of interest beyond the RBI ruling rate.

The duty of judge is to render justice;
his art is to delay it.

Justice Delayed Justice Denied

Media reports suggest that number of High Courts have failed to deliver judgments in cases long after they are heard and reserved for judgment. The period of waiting has been several months and in few cases years belying expectations of all reasonable hopes of the lawyers/litigants. In some cases they have been ordered to be released from part heard after long wait while in few cases the benches have to be reconstituted on account of the non-availability of judge/s due to various administrative reasons. Karnataka High Court is no exception in this regard. Unfortunately the High Court establishments do not publish statistics in this regard even after demands.

Judges have a definite responsibility to adjudicate the cases brought up before them and deliver judgments. This obligation includes the responsibility to render speedy judgments. Situations of inability of the judges to deliver judgments long after the cases are reserved for judgment does not augur well and is opposed to public interest. Lot of effort and expenses go into the stage of hearing of each case and it is nothing short of a colossal loss when the judge/s fails to deliver judgment within a reasonable time. Releasing them from part heard status and or the necessity of constitution of different bench can only be said to be mockery of justice. Needless to state that the inordinate delay in disposal of pending cases, particularly those cases which have been fully heard, has been the cause for lot of heart burn and social unrest. The old saying that justice delayed is justice denied should receive greater emphasis at the present juncture because of the long delays caused by the courts in disposing off the cases.

A concomitant situation is also noticed in trial courts when the cases had to be heard on several occasion by different judges on account of transfers, internal rotations, retirements and a host of other administrative reasons. The courts of law which are expected to be eager to bring finality to disputes have unfortunately proved to be stumbling blocks in dispensing justice. Do the judges have no accountability in this regard? A serious introspection on the part of the judges is called for and one can only hope that the powers that be find lasting solution to this unhappy situation. As otherwise the judges will have to face the ire of the society.

Prof. Guttal's Speech in USA:

From the last issue

*Separation of powers is a fundamental principle in our constitution as it is in the American constitution. The judiciary exercises the powers of Judicial review to set aside the orders passed by the head of the executive and sometimes the law passed by the legislature is also set aside if it is contrary to the provisions of the constitution. Thus the judiciary in India holds a unique position and its judgements are respected and enforced by coercion. At the same time I must emphasize here that in India there is only one hierarchical system of judiciary throughout the country. In this country each state has its own system of law and its own court rules. I don't know how this multi-system of judicial law can be conciled with the equal protection of laws clause embodied in the XIV amendment of the American constitution. Even assuming that the legal system in each state can be reconciled with equal protection of the laws Clause of XIV amendment, it is necessary in the interest of the legal profession that there should be one uniform code for all the Bar Members of America, then they can practice law in any State without any hindrance of passing different examinations in different States. This brings all the states closer to each other and the integrity of the Nation can be maintained.

At present, on the threshold of 21st century, United States of America has become a role model for all the nations of the World. The whole World is looking for what this country does in respect of matters pertaining to economics, human right and nuclear weapons. Thus fate of the entire Universe is depending upon what America does. America is great not because every man here struggled for his own survival, but because every American accepted individual responsibility for the survival of all people. After adopting the policy of global economy the concept of national state is disappearing and in place of National states, regional states and tribal states are becoming more conspicuous. In this context I may suggest that America may encourage more and more investment in the developing nations and help solve the problems of Human rights and Labour right of the people there, in accordance to International Standards.

A constitution does not consist of words alone but of public attitudes and habits. Words have their own peculiar symbolic power which must not be underestimated, but symbolism itself is of little value if it is not representative of what is socially living and active. The spirit of the constitution is to be found in the attitude and habits of the people. According to the change of spirit the constitution has been amended from time to time.

In India, the Judiciary is following the American Judgements in giving effect to the bill of rights. Thus Indian Judiciary has switched over its "Procedure Established by Law" clause to "Due Process of Law" Clause of American constitution. Similarly in matters pertaining to public interest litigation and "Legal Aid" our Supreme Court has borrowed almost all principles enunciated by the federal Supreme Court of America.

In India the constitution has been amended about 80 times during the short span of 50 years. In this way Indian constitution is like British constitution. In England there is no written constitution. The Parliament is everything and the constitution can be amended easily and at any time. Thus in India also the constitution can be amended easily and to some extent it is not a rigid constitution and it is more flexible constitution. Thus India is following a trial and error method to achieve the goals set in the Preamble of the constitution. In England such documents as Magna Carta (1215), the Habeas Corpus Act (1641), the Bill of Rights (1689), the Act of Settlement (1701), the Parliament (1911) have been adopted over the time.

The essential quality of constitution is that "it is a legal limitation on government; it is antithesis of arbitrary rule. People are the true and original source of all governmental authority and that government is their agent. We all belong to one globe after globalisation of economy. We are all now concerned with the welfare of all human beings.

We have accepted Universal brother-hood and we know and it is well established that the basic structures of the constitution are the same throughout the world. Whether you call Socialist Democracy or Capitalist Democracy the sovereign authority vests in the people, let us avoid all our prejudices and biases and work for the good of the humanity. Let us avoid corruption in the society and corruption is the enemy of humanity. Let human welfare be our main concern. Let us stop thinking in terms of different nations. Here I may quote a few lines from GITANJALI, written by Rabindranath Tagore:

"Where the mind is without fear and the head is held high.

Where Knowledge is free

Where the words come out from the depth of truth

Where is clear stream of reason has not lost its way into the dreary desert sand of dead habits

Where the world has not been broken up into fragments by narrow domestic walls; My father let my country awake into that heaven of freedom".
