About Susan

Susan Still is a nationally recognized survivor-advocate whose powerful story of survival under extreme domestic abuse became a catalyst for change—on the front lines and in the courtroom. After years of silent suffering and unimaginable control, her courageous testimony not only led to one of the longest domestic violence sentences in New York history, but also became the subject of the documentary Power and Control.

Now, Susan brings her voice, insight, and lived expertise to audiences across the country. Her keynote presentations and training sessions equip military leaders, law enforcement, mental health professionals, and community stakeholders with the tools to recognize red flags, support victims, and create lasting change in their institutions.
