	SECTION A: READING SKILLS	22
1.	1. Read the following passages. Dear reader, it rests with you and me, whether, in our two fields of action, similar things shall be or not. Let them be! We shall sit with lighter bosoms on the hearth, to see the ashes of our fires turn grey and cold. There is a wisdom of the Head, and a wisdom of the Heart. The first will never do alone. We must have both, to bring us to perfection. The heart must be educated, the affections trained, the feelings cultivated, or the mind is but a poor, cold instrument, that may strike with precision, but without melody. Sissy Jupe, the simple-hearted girl, who had known so much sorrow, was the comforter of many. She had no learning of the head, but she had a store of love and gentleness that never failed her. Her cheerful spirit and her kind heart shed brightness upon all around her. Wherever she went, she carried tenderness and hope. Louisa Gradgrind, after her trials, found peace at last. Her life was quiet, but not lonely; for Sissy was her constant companion, and the children who gathered about them learned early that love is better than pride, and faith more beautiful than knowledge. Mr. Gradgrind, humble before the wisdom of the Heart, kept to the end of his life a conscience sore and tender for the mistakes of his early training.	12

	He had learned, in his own sharp experience, that rigid Facts and cold Reason are not all in all; that the graces and gentlenesses of life are its soul; and that imagination, pity, and affection are not to be banished from its duties, or denied their share in its rewards. Thus, out of the ruin of his former system, something nobler arose. He had been a man made of facts and calculations, but he became a man touched by sorrow and made wise by love. And so, among the smoke and the machinery of Coketown, there were still hearts that beat with kindness, still homes where tenderness and pity dwelt. There were children taught to believe in goodness, and men and women who learned, from the example of Sissy Jupe, that no life is wasted which brings comfort to another. So ends this story. Not all lives are bright or successful, not all hearts are happy; but in the darkest streets, there shines, here and there, a small light — the light of love, of faith, and of compassion — which, if it be followed, will lead us at last to peace. Source: Hard Times by Charles Dickens (Book III, Chapter 9 – “Final”) Answer the following questions, based on the passage above. I. Dickens contrasts “wisdom of the Head” with “wisdom of the Heart” to emphasize- 1 A) the need for emotional balance in human life B) the superiority of facts over feelings C) the decline of education in industrial England D) the importance of strict reasoning II. Through the character of Sissy Jupe, Dickens symbolizes — 1 A) the failure of modern education B) the power of compassion and moral strength C) the decline of industrial society D) the importance of wealth and success III. Mr. Gradgrind’s transformation at the end of the story reflects Dickens’s belief that- 1 A) intellect alone can solve social problems B) emotional growth leads to true wisdom C) punishment ensures moral reform D) success depends on discipline IV. The “light of love, faith, and compassion” that shines in the darkest streets is a symbol of —

	Meteorological factors have worsened the situation. Calm winds and low temperatures have trapped pollutants close to the ground, while post-Diwali fireworks and stubble burning in neighbouring states have added to the particulate load. Levels of PM2.5 and PM10 — the most harmful particles — have remained dangerously high. A bar graph of daily AQI values for the last seven days shows a clear upward trend, with readings consistently in the “Very Poor” to “Severe” range. The week began with an average AQI of around 320, rising above 400 by the weekend and peaking at nearly 450 in some localities. Even brief improvements were minor, showing that pollution remains persistent rather than temporary. According to reports from The Times of India and Reuters, visibility has dropped across the city, and morning smog has become denser. The Environment Ministry and Delhi Pollution Control Committee are monitoring the situation and may impose Stage IV measures if conditions do not improve. Health experts warn that prolonged exposure to such air increases the risk of respiratory infections, asthma, and cardiovascular disease. Citizens are advised to stay indoors when possible, wear N95 masks, use air purifiers, and avoid outdoor exercise. The continuing pattern reflected in the bar graph highlights that air pollution in Delhi is not a seasonal or one-day event, but a chronic crisis linked to urban planning, transport emissions, and agricultural burning. Without stronger regional coordination, temporary curbs under GRAP may bring only limited relief. Answer the following questions, based on the given passage. I. Fill in the Blanks: 1 The levels of _____ and _____ are the main contributors to Delhi’s poor air quality. II. Which measure is part of the GRAP Stage III restrictions? 1 a) Closure of schools b) Ban on fireworks c) Control on construction and industrial activity d) Free public transport III. Using the bar graph, explain the trend of Delhi’s AQI levels over the week and what it suggests about the city’s pollution pattern. 2 For Visually Impaired Candidates Based on the summary, describe how Delhi’s air quality changed during the week and what this indicates about pollution levels in the city. IV. What does the red dashed line at AQI 400 in the bar graph
