Fillable shipper's letter of instruction

What is Shipper's Letter of Instruction? A shipper's letter of instruction (SLI), also known as the shipper's export declaration, is an authorization document that is issued by the exporter to its agents or freight forwarders.

The SLI document mainly contains details about the shipping terms, allowing the transport company to issue an air waybill or Bill of Lading (BOL) on the exporter's behalf. It also lays out directions for the carrier on how to handle, store, load and unload the shipment effectively or without any physical damage to the products. Apart from providing transportation and documentation instructions, an SLI also facilitates export control, reporting information while allowing the agent to file Electronic Export Information (EEI) and send it to the Automated Export System (AES). Who fills out the shipper's letter of instruction?

It is the exporter or shipper's duty to sign the shipper's letter of instruction with all the important information and detailed instructions on how to process the order. The letter will act as a handbook for the freight forwarder/agent to process the order according to agreed terms and conditions of the shipping term, leading to easy movement of the goods. Documents Required for Import-Export Customs Clearance Is SLI required for Export? All export shipments require a complete SLI. Shipping instruction in export acts as a way to formalize how and where to handle your export shipment. It also grants permission to the forwarder to act as the authorized forwarding agent for export control and customs-related processes. gmat verbal workbook pdf An SLI is not a mandatory or legally binding requirement. However, the dependency may vary from country to country, determining the country-specific rules and foreign trade regulations. It serves as an order form as well as proof of purchasing from the forwarder. Exporters need to fill out the document before sending out the goods.
