LEANNE JEFFERS

Leanne Jeffers is a classical crossover artist, actress, Ecologist, song writer and a mother of two.

Born in a military hospital in North Yorkshire and travelling around with the army as a child Leanne found her adventures inspirational leading to her passions, the arts and science.

Most well known for her appearances on the BBC's global hit TV series Michael McIntyre's Big Show filmed at the theatre Royal in London's West End, Leanne has had continued success with her debut EP 'No worries' charting in the iTunes Vocal chart at number 3 ahead of Tom Jones and Andrea Bocelli.

Her second EP 'Colour' was produced by multi-platinum selling producer Fred Cox who created success for Rag'n 'Bone Man on his number 1 selling album Human. Her largest live audience consisted of 74,000 people at Leeds party in the park. Over the year 2020 Leanne has enjoyed working as an actress and a collaborative songwriter for the online company Bookstreamz, created a campaign against racism with her music video 'Born To Make A Difference' and has had more time to delve into her writing and scientific study at the university of York.

INTERVIEW TOPIC

After the death of George Floyd, Leanne lost hundreds of friends when they showed their racial hate online. “To see your friends writing racial hate against people, when you’ve seen a totally different side to them for your whole life was heart breaking. I felt worthless and let down by people I thought I could trust”. Through research into her culture that she thought she knew she later found out that her whole existence had been a lie. The history that she was told about by her family and that had been taught to her at school was completely different to the history she was reading about. And the experiences in life that she had accepted daily were suddenly acceptable to talk about and to stand up against. This new understanding of her history and her life helped her to truly find herself After finding out this avalanche of information, Leanne voiced her knew findings in her music, her writing and in awareness campaigns.
