

This year the losco County Agricultural Society dedicates the Fair Premium Book In Memory of Robert Ross Webb

Robert and his wife Arlene started R. Webb and Son Well Drilling in 1966, and shortly thereafter became regular supporters of the “losco County Fair”. Robert’s support started by drilling a well and setting up a temporary water supply to service the many activities that went on during fair week. He is remembered for having a booth set up where he greeted everyone while having a raffle for well work that he would perform for the winner. As the fair kept expanding, becoming better and needing upgrades, he was always there to ensure that whatever the water requirements were they were being met. As the years went by Robert might not have been the one personally doing the work, but he always ensured that his men were there to accomplish the mission. He was a strong supporter of the 4H livestock auction, and for years his company was one of the buyers, supporting this 4H program. He was always willing to help out with all the different aspects of the fair including hauling water for the rodeo animals, hauling water for the concession stands, and making sure that everything was up to snuff for the health department requirements. As the fair kept expanding he donated equipment for use in the building projects, and to run water lines throughout the grounds. One of the things though that most people will remember Robert for was his love of the parade. No matter what you could always count on Robert being in the parade with his many vehicles while throwing candy to the kids.
