On this issue, featured in a detailed story on Taproot Edmonton, I agree with Councillor Andrew Knack. www.tinyurl.com/KnackBill5020

Edmonton's Oct. 20, 2025 civic election campaign will serve as a window to the soul of how a successful candidate will govern over the city's 3.4 billion yearly budget.

A big spender on an election campaign, a historical big tax and spend candidate will be a big spender in their governing style.

Alberta's Bill 50, which builds on Bill 20 has introduced political parties at the civic level.

A candidate for mayor, like Tim Cartmell, for example, can now spend up to two million dollars in his campaign.

Edmonton voters have to ask, why would someone want to raise and spend one to two million dollars for a $206,000 a year job?

Candidates can buy an election or honestly earn the election.

I prefer earning the trust of Edmontonians to manage their hard earned tax dollars for the next four years. I am only beholden to our citizens, not to a party, group or individual big donors.
