PM Economy Speech: 30 June 2020

PM Boris Johnson made a speech on the economy in Dudley.

Published 30 June 2020

From: Prime Minister's Office, 10 Downing Street (<https://www.gov.uk/government/organisations/prime-ministers-office-10-downing-street>) and The Rt Hon Boris Johnson MP (<https://www.gov.uk/government/people/boris-johnson>)

Delivered on: 30 June 2020 (Transcript of the speech, exactly as it was delivered)

It may seem a bit premature to make a speech now about Britain after Covid when that deceptively nasty disease is still rampant in other countries when global case numbers are growing fast and when many in this country are nervous – rightly – about more outbreaks whether national or local like the flare-up in Leicester whereas I promised we are putting on the brakes and I thank the people of Leicester for their forbearance and yet we cannot continue simply to be prisoners of this crisis

We are preparing now slowly and cautiously to come out of hibernation and I believe it is absolutely vital for us now to set out the way ahead so that everyone can think and plan for the future – short, medium and long term because if the covid crisis has taught us one thing it is that this country needs to be ready for what may be coming and we need to be able to move with levels of energy and speed that we have not needed for generations

And I know that there are plenty of things that people say and will say that we got wrong and we owe that discussion and that honesty to the tens of thousands who have died before their time to the families who have lost loved ones and of course there must be time to learn the lessons, and we will but I also know that some things went right – and emphatically right

I think of the speed and efficiency with which we put up the Nightingales – ten days for a hospital –

I think of the drive and inventiveness of the British companies who rose to the ventilator challenge with three brand new production lines called into being within the space of eight weeks with a new model of ventilator developed in March and granted regulatory approval in weeks, and 9,500 of them now made

I pay tribute to the pace at which Oxford university managed to perform the trials for dexamethasone the world's first demonstrably life-saving treatment for the disease

I am in awe of the problem-crunching fury with which HMRC and the Treasury created the furlough scheme and all the other means of support world-leading standards of protection for jobs and incomes set up in a matter of days

There were brilliant and determined individuals who more than rose to the challenge of this crisis there were thousands and thousands who put their hearts and souls into it and yet our debt is not just to them

It is not just even to the devotion and love of the NHS and the care workers who saved so many lives including my own

There was one big reason in the end that we were able to avert a far worse disaster and that was because the whole of society came together to make a sacrifice on behalf of those who might be particularly vulnerable – particularly the elderly

We all knew when we went into lockdown that there would be huge economic costs

We could see what would happen and yet we did it, we the United Kingdom in a display of solidarity not seen since world war two and so today we must combine that energy and drive with that concentrated burst of collective willpower that protected the NHS controlled the virus and saved literally hundreds of thousands of lives and we must work fast because we have already seen the vertiginous drop in GDP and we know that people are worried now about their jobs and their businesses and we are waiting as if between the flash of lightning and the thunderclap with our hearts in our mouths for the full economic reverberations to appear and we must use this moment – now – this interval to plan our response and to fix of course the problems that were most brutally illuminated in that covid lightning flash the problems in our social care system the parts of government that seemed to respond so sluggishly so that sometimes it seemed like that recurring bad dream when you are telling your feet to run and your feet won't move and yet we must also go further and realise that if we are to recover fully if we are to deal with the coming economic aftershock then this covid crisis is also the moment to address the problems in our country that we have failed to tackle for decades because it is one of the most extraordinary features of the UK – in so many ways the greatest place on earth – that we tolerate such yawning gaps between the best and the rest

We have some of the best and most productive companies in the world – and yet we are not as nationally productive as many of our global competitors

We have the world's most brilliant medical minds, the world's best pharmaceutical companies, our doctors and treatments are the best in the world and yet we have so many millions who have to wait for too long to see their GP – even before the new waiting lists produced by the crisis

We have umpteen fantastic, globally outstanding universities and yet too many degree courses are not now delivering value and for a century we have failed to invest enough in further education and give young people the practical training and further education they need

We have a capital city that was, is and will be in so many ways the capital of the world theatre, finance, tech, restaurants you name it, London leads the world and yet too many parts of this country have felt left behind neglected, unloved, as though someone had taken a strategic decision that their fate did not matter as much as the metropolis so I want you to know that this government not only has a vision to change this country for the better we have a mission to unite and to level up the mission on which we were elected last year and we have a plan and in advancing that plan now

I just serve notice that we will not be responding to this crisis with what people called austerity we are not going to try to cheese-pare our way out of trouble because the world has moved on since 2008 and we not only face a new and in some ways a far bigger challenge and I can tell everybody, businesses that next week the Chancellor will be setting out our immediate plan to support the economy through the first phase of our recovery but this moment also gives us a much greater chance to be radical and to do things differently to build back better to build back bolder and so we will be doubling down on our strategy we will double down on levelling up and when I say level up, I don't mean attacking our great companies

I don't mean impeding the success of London – far from it or launching some punitive raid on the wealth creators

I don't believe in tearing people down any more than I believe in tearing down statues that are part of our heritage let alone a statue of our greatest wartime leader

I believe in building people up giving everyone growing up in this country the opportunity they need whoever you are, whatever your ethnicity, whatever your background and there are certain things that are indispensable for that opportunity the hospital you are born in the schools you go to the safety of the streets where you grow up and this government has not forgotten that we were elected to build 40 new hospitals and we will – Matt Hancock is setting out the list in the next few days, and that is just the beginning

We will continue and step up the biggest ever programme of funding the NHS and we won't wait to fix the problem of social care that every government has flunked for the last 30 years

We will end the injustice that some people have to sell their homes to finance the costs of their care while others don't

We are finalising our plans and we will build a cross-party consensus

We will look after those who have looked after us and at the same time

We will build the foundations now for future prosperity to make this country – a Britain that is fully independent and self-governing for the first time in 45 years the most attractive place to live and to invest and to set up a company with the most motivated and highly skilled workforce and so we are investing massively now in education with over £14bn for primary and secondary education between now and 2023 and today with a new ten year school building programme beginning now with £1bn for the first 50 schools and a vast £1.5 bn programme of refurbishing our dilapidated Further Education sector – dilapidated in many places, but not here of course because it is time the system recognised that talent and genius are expressed as much by hand and by eye as they are in a spreadsheet or an essay so when I say unite and level up when I say build up people and build up talent

I want to end the current injustice that means a pupil from a London state school is now 50 per cent more likely to go to a top university than a pupil from the west midlands and that is not only unjust it is such a waste of human talent

We will unleash the potential of the entire country and that means basic things, cracking down again on the crime that blights too many streets and too many lives and we will get on with our plan to recruit 20,000 more police officers – we have already found 3,000 and I thank them for everything they are doing and have done in this crisis and we will back our police all the way and give our justice system the powers we need to end the lunacy that stops us – for instance – deporting some violent offenders just as we have already stopped the automatic early release of terrorists

We will make this country safer

We will build the hospitals build the schools and the colleges but we will also build back greener and build a more beautiful Britain we will protect the landscape with flood defences and plant 30,000 hectares of trees every year creating a new patchwork of woodlands to enchant and re-energise the soul and in those towns that feel left behind we have plans to invest in their centres and with new academy schools, new green buses, new broadband and we want to make them places where people have the confidence to stay, to raise their families and to start businesses and not to feel that the action is all in the cities or the metropolis and yet I don't think that this crisis has ended the desire or need to move around swiftly and efficiently

We have learned the wonders of Zoom and MS Teams the joys of muting or unmuting our colleagues at key moments but we still need to travel and more than ever the time has come when we must unite and level up in the most basic way possible not just with HS2 and NPR but with better roads, better rail unblocking the central Manchester bottleneck that delays services across the north and 4000 brand new zero carbon buses and a massive new plan for cycleways and we will build and rebuild those vital connexions to every part of the UK because now is the moment to strengthen that incredible partnership between England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and I know that some have sometimes played up the legitimate variations in the response between the devolved administrations but when you look at the whole effort you can see the absolutely vital role of that union and that partnership

It is our fantastic UK armed services that have played such a crucial role in this crisis running the test centres, building the hospitals, transporting people from the Shetlands to the right Covid wards

It was the might of the UK Treasury that set up that furlough scheme – in all corners of the country and sent massive and immediate extra funding to all four parts of the UK

I believe the union has more than showed its worth and a prosperous and united Kingdom must be a connected Kingdom and that is why we are now accelerating projects from South West to the North East from Wales, to Scotland, to Northern Ireland and to drive economic growth in all parts of the country we will carry out a study of all future road, rail, air and cross-sea links between our all our four parts of the UK

When did a government first promise to dual the A1 to Scotland ?

It was 1992

Well this government is going to do it and it is this infrastructure revolution that will allow us to end that other chronic failure of the British state decade after decade in which we have failed to build enough homes

We will build fantastic new homes on brownfield sites and other areas that with better transport and other infrastructure could frankly be suitable and right for development and address that intergenerational injustice and help young people get on the housing ladder in the way that their parents and grandparents could and it is to galvanise this whole process that this government will shortly bring forward the most radical reforms of our planning system since the end of the second world war

Yes, we will insist on beautiful and low carbon homes but covid has taught us the cost of delay why does UK public procurement take 50 per cent longer than in Germany?

why are UK capital costs typically between 10 and 30 per cent higher than other European projects?

Why is HS2 – transformational though it will be – going to cost us the equivalent of the GDP of Sri Lanka?

Why are we so slow at building homes by comparison with other European countries?

In 2018 we built 2.25 homes per 1000 people

Germany managed 3.6, the Netherlands 3.8, France 6.8

I tell you why - because time is money, and the newt-counting delays in our system are a massive drag on the productivity and the prosperity of this country and so we will build better and build greener but we will also build faster and that is why the Chancellor and I have set up Project Speed to scythe through red tape and get things done and with every home we make, every mile of full fibre broadband that we lay with every flood-defending culvert that we dig with every railway station, hospital or school that we build we will of course be tackling the next wave of this crisis by helping to create thousands of high-paid high-skilled jobs because we know in our hearts that the furloughing cannot go on forever and as the economy recovers we also know that the jobs that many people had in January are also not coming back or at least not in that form and we know that is our biggest and most immediate economic challenge that we face and so we will offer an Opportunity Guarantee so that every young person has the chance of apprenticeship or an in-work placement so that they maintain the skills and confidence they need to find the job that is right for them

I am conscious as I say all this that it sounds like a prodigious amount of government intervention

It sounds like a New Deal and all I can say is that if so, then that is how it is meant to sound and to be because that is what the times demand a government that is powerful and determined and that puts its arms around people at a time of crisis that tackles homelessness the inequalities that drive people to food banks because it is time now not just for a New Deal but a Fair Deal for the British people and we can do all this now partly because of the prudent management of the economy in the last ten years but also because we are planning to invest now when the cost of borrowing allows it and when the returns are greatest because that is the way both now and in the medium term to drive the growth, to fuel the animal spirits and the long-term business investment on which our future prosperity depends my friends I am not a communist

I believe it is also the job of government to create the conditions for free market enterprise and yes of course we clap for our NHS but under this government we also applaud those who make our NHS possible our innovators

our wealth creators our capitalists and financiers because in the end it is their willingness to take risks with their own money that will be crucial for our future success

This is Dudley the birthplace of Abraham Darby who massively accelerated the industrial revolution by using coke instead of charcoal to produce pig iron

(it may not sound like it, but it's also the greener option) and today Dudley remains at the cutting edge of green technology that is increasingly driving the whole of the UK economy

It was here in 2011 that a company called Westfield produced the world's first commercially viable electric racing car and the whole of the West Midlands is now a global centre of battery technology and batteries for EVs and that is the vision of Mayor Andy Street, and we will back that vision

This is a government that backs Britain, and believes in British innovation and this summer we will be creating a new science funding agency to back high risk, high reward projects because in the next 100 years the most successful societies will be the most innovative societies and we in this country have the knack of innovation we lead the world in quantum computing, in life sciences, in genomics, in AI, space satellites, net zero planes, and in the long term solutions to global warming wind, solar, hydrogen technology carbon capture and storage, nuclear and as part of our mission to reach Net Zero CO2 emissions by 2050, we should set ourselves the goal now of producing the world's first zero emission long haul passenger plane

Jet Zero, let's do it and though we are no longer a military superpower we can be a science superpower but we must end the chasm between invention and application that means a brilliant British discovery disappears to California and becomes a billion dollar American company or a Chinese company and we need now a new dynamic commercial spirit to make the most of UK breakthroughs so that British ideas produce new British industries and British jobs

And yet to achieve all that from where we are now we must get on first with the hard and painstaking work of re-opening our economy and I feel the urgency and impatience of all those sectors that are still being held back the theatres, the arts, the salons, the gyms, the cricket clubs, sectors in which we lead the world and yet which suffer because they depend on the very physical proximity and contact that Covid makes so difficult and I say to everybody in those sectors we will get you going as fast as we can we will get life back to normal for as many as possible as fast as possible

But as we approach July 4 I am afraid that the dangers – as we can see in Leicester - have not gone away the virus is out there still circling like a shark in the water and it will take all our collective discipline and resolve to keep that virus at bay and if we can and get on to the next phase of recovery then we can get on all the faster to the next phase and to the delivery of our plan

This is a government that is wholly committed not just to defeating coronavirus but to using this crisis finally to tackle this country's great unresolved challenges of the last three decades to build the homes to fix the NHS

to solve social care to tackle the skills crisis to mend the indefensible gap in opportunity and productivity and connectivity between the regions of the UK to unite and level up and to that end we will build, build, build build back better build back greener build back faster and to do that at the pace that this moment requires we need now to distil the very best of the psychic energy of the last few months let's take the zap and élan of the armed services who helped to build the Nightingales let's take the selflessness and the love of the health and the care workers and the charities the public spirit and the good humour of the entire population and let's brew them together with the superhuman energy of Captain Tom bounding around his garden at the age of 100 and raising millions for charity let's take that combination, that spirit bottle it, swig it and I believe we will have found if not quite a magic potion, at least the right formula to get us through these dark times

And I must stress that there will still be some tough times ahead and to work this whole plan through will take effort, and nerve, and patience and no we won't get everything right we certainly won't get everything right first time but this is the moment to be ambitious to believe in Britain to rise to the scale of the challenge and the opportunity

If we deliver this plan together then we will together build our way back to health

We will not just bounce back

We will bounce forward – stronger and better and more united than ever before.

Thank you all very much.
