CORONA

Corona, in the days of the Dons, was one large cattle range with hundreds of Spanish cattle grazing over it. It was purchased from the Yorba estate by the South Riverside Land and Water Company in 1886, buying 12,000 acres at the time. To secure water for the immediate use, they dug a well on the very spot where Hunnys Restaurant is today.

In the early days the town went through many names: "Queen Colony": "South Riverside": and for a short time "Circle City": but in 1896 the name Corona was voted in.

In 1887 the first Orange was produced from a single tree planted on the grounds of the Hotel Temescal. During that same year the first Orange Grove was laid out at the northeast corner of Olive and Buena Vista. By 1892, 2500 acres of oranges and lemons had been planted on the best land, selling for $250 an acre. By 1893 the first carload of oranges shipped, and for 80 years the citrus market dominated. At the same time, R.B. Taylor set out 14,000 lemon trees, and Corona became known as the "Lemon Capital of the World" for many years.

If you take a look around the dining room in Hunnys you will notice that the nostalgia of the long remembered citrus groves are brought back to life through the windows that are painted on the walls. When they seat you, you can view the scenes from days gone by with the seemingly endless rows of orange trees.

In 1893 water was purchased from Lake Elsinore and soon a canal was built, but by 1898 the citrus growers were finding out that the water from Lake Elsinore was too alkaline and was ruining their groves.

During 1888 and 1889 there was a huge grasshopper plague and millions of the pests covered the area. Men and boys were hired to knock them off the trees, while some orchard owners took to covering their trees with muslin. Other owners brought in ducks and turkeys to run loose through their groves, eventually, by plowing over the land, they gradually disappeared.

It is reported that the circular boulevard around the city was modeled after the one in Omaha, Nebraska and Paris, France. The 3-mile circular drive was nearly 100 feet wide, and inside the circle the town site was subdivided.

In 1913, the first Corona Road Race took place. The trophy was said to have cost $5,000 and the winning purse was $11,000, something unheard of at that time. The first race was won by Earl Cooper driving 301.89 miles in 4 hours, 2 minutes and 38 seconds. He set a world record on that race and received a $1,000 bonus to his winnings of $8,250. His first tryout around the track was at 88 miles per hour. "Terrible" Teddy Tetslaff clocked his 120 hp Fiat at 102 mph. Compare that with today's top speeds on oval tracks quite a difference. The second race in 1914 had over 100,000 people attending. People were curious which cars were best, American or European. The French make Peugeots were clocking over 110 mph, but Earl Coopers American made Stutz was looking good. Eddy Pullen won the race with an average speed of 87.76 mph. Barney Oldfield finished second, and set a world record for driving 300 miles - non stop. By 1916, waning interests, financial losses, and four deaths during the third race brought it to an end.

Growth is good, and it speeds us along at a pace which is sometimes grueling. But one can't help missing those hills of orange blossoms and lemons, and the quietness that must have enveloped the town in those days. It goes by quickly and once gone you can only capture in memory. That is what Hunnys set out to do, by bringing you some fond memories, in a most unique visual sense. So sit down and gaze out the windows and feel the peace and see the beauty once again.

Today's fast paced world can actually feel like 1915 again when it took 55 minutes to go from Corona to Riverside by street car ... just try the 91 freeway during rush hour! Hmm ... times haven't changed much.
