Craig's thieving brother Zay keeps showing up to put his own interests ahead of his sibling's, and he's frequently accompanied by sociopath/mogul Rodney Lamonca and Rodney's terrifyingly precocious daughter Prada (Anna Mae Quinn)...'Killing It' is one of TV's most criminally overlooked Comedies.

CONCRETE PLAYGROUND.

... They're also unscrupulous entrepreneur Rodney Lamonca (Tim Heidecker, I Think You Should Leave with Tim Robinson) and his mini-mogul 12-year-old daughter Prada (Anna Mae Quinn, A Carolina Christmas), who aren't done with Craig and Jillian from season one.

...Fleshing out season two's storylines with an array of eclectic folks, Battle, Heidecker, Quinn and the also-returning Scott MacArthur (No Hard Feelings) all steal scenes.

...One episode really nails motivational speakers and the money-grabbing conferences where they often gather in a mass of self-delusion, isolating the truly nasty, yet still very funny, Rodney LaMonca (Tim Heidecker). His daughter, Prada LaMonca (Anna Mae Quinn), is somehow even more savagely nasty, yet still very funny, than he is.

Re season 2: ...Among the guest stars, Anna Mae Quinn is the scariest, most rapacious businesswoman I have ever seen, even if her character is only 12 years of age.

Despite their good intentions, Craig and Jillian are constantly dragged down into the muck with worms like Rodney Lamonca and his equally hideous daughter, Prada Lamonca (Anna Mae Quinn).

Caught up on Peacock's "Killing It," which manages to be exceptionally bleak and laugh-out-loud funny, utterly low-brow and smartly satirical at once. Good stuff. Not sure where a third season could go, but I'm ready for a Prada LaMonca spinoff, plus more "Florida Girls" cameos.

Will Prada Lamonca Continue To Run Rodney's Business?

Prada (Anna Mae Quinn) successfully takes her father's company right from under his nose. He respects the move but "jokes" about taking it back. We don't expect Prada to hold on to her company for too long, especially with the deviousness of her father. Additionally, with the growing nepo baby debate, some of the board members may try to vote her out. They may not feel that she earned the company and benefits from nepotism, even though she clearly finessed and stole it away from Rodney (Tim Heidecker).
