

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

The Howe Foundation is extremely pleased to welcome Nia McCardell as our very first Intern. Nia, a sophomore at Rice University who is studying Sport Management and Psychology will be joining the Howe Foundation this week. Nia is a member of the Rice Volleyball team and has a passion for developing creative content that overall promotes growth and customer interest.

This marks the beginning of the Howe Foundation Internship Program. In collaboration with the prestigious Rice University, based in Houston, TX, students pursuing a career in Sports Management or related fields will assist the Howe Foundation in our communication, fundraising and scholarship award efforts.

Rice University was recently recognized by Niche.com for the third consecutive year as the #1 sport management program school in the country out of more than 400 sport management programs nationwide.

With the wonderful work that Rice is doing for their students particularly in the sports field, it was certainly fitting to establish this new program with their assistance.

Nia will begin this week in supporting the Howe Foundation through a variety of missions.

"I am excited to work with the Howe Foundation to help raise money for kids in sports and also women in the business of sports. My ultimate goal is to help the Howe Foundation reach new levels to achieve their mission/goals." – Nia McCardell

Just like Colleen was a pioneer in her day for women in the sports industry, we hope this new program will help more young adults create their own path of success.

A special Thank You to Tom Stallings, Director of Career Development at Rice University in their Department of Sports Management for making this happen.
