Fighting the “Five Poisons”

The Chinese government defames groups of people it considers the greatest danger to its own rule, calling these the “Five Poisons.” It [the government] fights them not only at home, but even spies on their adherents who live in Germany. Affected are most of all those whom China suspects of separatism: Uighurs and Tibetans, as well as adherents of the meditation movement Falun Gong. Beyond these, China’s communist party also considers members of the democracy movement and advocates for an independent Taiwan as state enemies.
