

U and Universal

ESPN continues their relationship with Special Olympics

ESPN has struck an eight year agreement with Special Olympics, extending its broadcast and sponsorship rights for Special Olympics World Games, World Winter Games and USA Games through 2027. ESPN has a 35 year relationship with Special Olympics, working to end discrimination against people with intellectual disabilities. ESPN's coverage of major Special Olympics events will continue to reach fans around the world. Special Olympics and ESPN have made real progress in spotlighting these incredible athletes and their achievements and will continue bringing inspiring stories to millions of fans according to Russell Wolff, general manager of ESPN.

Did you know?

The Walter B. Jones Center just celebrated 50 years of recovery

The Walter B. Jones Center (Greenville N.C.) opened in 1969 as one of the first state-operated alcohol and drug abuse treatment services in North Carolina. Since that time, the center has helped over 56,000 North Carolinians across 38 counties. Admission is available to any adult, regardless of financial resources. Those in need can get help by contacting their LME/MCO for assistance.