

Matt Hoverman is a Principal in CLA’s Business Risk Services practice, where he leads the firm’s Higher Education enterprise risk management and internal audit services. With more than 20 years of professional services experience, Matt has spent his career helping organizations cut through technology complexity and understand what truly matters from a risk, control, and governance perspective.

His background spans third-party risk management, systems implementations, information security, internal and external audit, and management consulting across multiple industries. Before joining CLA, Matt served as Risk Advisory Leader at Gilmore Jasion Mahler and spent 18 years in the Big 4 at EY and PwC.

Known for translating “IT speak” into practical, auditor-friendly insights, Matt focuses on what non-IT auditors actually need to understand to ask better questions, recognize real risks, and add value without becoming technologists themselves. His sessions are practical, engaging, and grounded in real-world examples drawn from decades of advising organizations on the intersection of technology and business risk.
