

Tom O'Reilly is the Founder of the Internal Audit Collective, the #1 online, private community and training company for Internal Audit and SOX compliance professionals.

Drawing on nearly two decades of audit leadership and industry experience, Tom has built the Internal Audit Collective into a trusted hub where practitioners and leaders can ask questions, provide answers and network with a community of like-minded peers around the globe.

Before launching the Internal Audit Collective, Tom was a 1st 30 employee at AuditBoard, where over 7.5 years he met with more than 1,000 internal audit and SOX teams. In that role, he helped leaders refine their strategies, improve processes, and adopt technology to uplevel team performance.

Prior to AuditBoard, Tom served as Chief Audit Executive at Analog Devices, a Fortune 500 semiconductor company, where he led the execution of a risk-based audit plan, oversaw SOX 404 compliance, and facilitated the company's enterprise risk management program.

Through the Collective, Tom continues to connect thousands of auditors worldwide with the tools, insights, and community they need to lead in a rapidly evolving risk environment. He is a frequent speaker, facilitator, and connector of people and ideas—always focused on enabling positive change in the audit profession.
