We put more emphasis on the action itself rather than if it is completed or not. The Present Continuous for example tells us about something that is temporary, at a certain moment that includes now. (Note: it is also used to talk about an arrangement for the future) I am writing this article about Continuous verb forms at the moment It is raining a little but the sun is shining. The people outside are talking about yesterday's football match Compare: Leonard is an architect, he works in a big office in London This month he is working in Paris, he is supervising a new construction. Both of the sentences above (1 and 2) are correct at the same time. In (1) we use the Present Simple to explain Leonard's normal, habitual situation. In (2) we use the Present Continuous to explain a temporary situation. He is in Paris but his permanent office is in London Video lesson: Present Continuous for long Temporary situations and action with exampless The Past Continuous is used to talk about an action at one moment in the past or the general situation. When I woke up yesterday I looked out of the window and I saw that the sun was shining, two people were sitting on a bench, they were eating a sandwich and some dogs were playing. We don't know when the sun started shining, or when the people went to sit on the bench, or when the dogs started playing. But we do know that, at the moment that I looked out of my window, that was the situation. – What were you doing yesterday at 8.05pm? – I was walking home from work. Was/were going to, for incompleted intentions: John was going to come for supper yesterday but he had to stay at work to prepare a meeting for today The Future Continuous: We use the Future Continuous to talk about an action at a moment in the future. At 2.00pm on Friday I'll be sitting on the plane on my way to New York If we want to speak English well, understand English well, write English well it is necessary to find out how to understand English grammar. Future continuous We make the future continuous tense with will + be + the present participle of a verb (-ing form). Affirmative: I will be driving (I'll be driving) Negative: I will not be waiting (I won't be waiting) Questions: Will you be sleeping? Negative questions: Will you not be working? (Won't you be working?) Use 1. The future continuous tense is used for activities that will be in progress at a point of time. The action will start before that point of time and will continue after it. The point in time can be given by time expressions or by other activities. With time expressions: At 8 o'clock I will be travelling to Dorset. This time tomorrow we'll be lying on the beach. With some other activity: The shop will be closed. Will you be working? I'll be sleeping when you come back. 2. It describes the idea that an action will happen in the normal course of events. It refers to routine activities, not intentions, decisions or plans. Don't worry. I'll be writing to you. (as usual) They'll be leaving on Friday.
You can join them. (They normally leave on Fridays.) Everybody will be working on a computer sooner or later. (If nothing special happens.) Our tip: English grammar books PDF All PDF exercises and grammar rules from this website.
