Scott Harrison
The Grand Lake Theatre 3/18 Wurlitzer
3200 Grand Ave., Oakland, CA
9:30 AM, Sunday, April 5th

Scott Harrison will present our April members and guests concert. Doors will open at 9:15 AM. The concert will begin at 9:30 AM. A four dollar donation will be requested to defray concert costs.

Scott began playing the organ at the age of fourteen, later progressing to the piano at seventeen.

In 1986 he heard his first theatre organ when he was invited to a Theatre Organ Society of Victoria [Australia] club night held at the Moorabbin Town Hall in Melbourne.

In April of 1987 Scott was offered the position of City Organist for the then City of Moorabbin where he presided over the magnificent 4/21 Wurlitzer. This organ had been removed from the State Theatre in Melbourne, and at the time, was the largest Wurlitzer installation in the Southern Hemisphere. Scott remained at the Town Hall as organist until he moved to New Zealand in 1993. During his six years as Organist at Moorabbin, he also served 18 months as Resident Organist at the Deedy Theatre, Brighton at T.O.S.A. Victoria's 3/15 ex-Capital Wurlitzer.

Combine both these appointments with running an electrical repair business, directing music for a large church, teaching music students and performing for various organ clubs around Melbourne and theatre organ groups overseas, and you have a idea how busy Scott is!

Scott last played for us in 1998 when he made a tour to the United States.

We don't get to hear the Grand Lake's fine Wurlitzer as often as we would like. We have to fit into the schedules of the various theatres we visit. Kevin King, owner of the Grand Lake Wurlitzer, like Scott, is involved in a profession, outside of music. He teaches in the Oakland Public School District. In addition to maintaining his organ, he plays it for the theatre on Saturday nights. Kevin also plays Friday and Sunday nights at the Bella Roma Pizza Restaurant in Martinez. Kevin is one of the principals on the NORCAL Berkeley crew. He has wined our entire organ. He tonally finished it and does tuning and fudging for all public performances.

CLOSING CHORD

Joyce Henningsen passed away Wednesday, April 3rd, after a long illness with Lou Gehrig’s disease. Her husband Carsten passed away March 2nd, 1999. Joyce is survived by her son Carsten Henningsen Jr. of Oregon and her daughter Maryann of Hayward.

The Henningsens opened Ye Old Pizza Joynt at 19510 Hesperian Blvd. in San Lorenzo in 1958. In 1962 the Wurlitzer pipe organ from the State Theatre in Fresno was installed and later additional ranks and a 3-manual console from the San Francisco Warfield Theatre were added to it.

The restaurant became the first organ equipped pizza restaurant; an institution to Bay Area theatre organ enthusiasts and an inspiration to other entrepreneurs throughout the country. Through the hospitality of the Henningsens, many NORCAL Chapter meetings and several National Convention events have been held at Ye Olde Pizza Joynt.

We extend our sincere condolences to Carsten Jr. and Maryann.

NEW MEMBERS

We welcome Roger Inkpen of Sunnyvale. Roger is the proprietor of San Jose Pipe Organ. One of the installations familiar to most west coast organ enthusiasts is the Robert Morton Organ in the Arlington Theatre in Santa Barbara, which was installed and is maintained by his company.

OPEN CONSOLE

Open console for NORCAL members will be held Sunday, May 19th. Players should call the NORCAL voice mail at (510) 644-2707 in the morning to confirm theatre availability. If available, enter via the back stage door at 1930 Allston Way.

KEVIN KING

in the National Media!

In the current April issue of the Smithsonian Magazine published under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, on page 24, there is an article about theatre organs. A very nice color picture of Kevin playing the Martinez Bella Roma console is included. A brief quote of Kevin’s explanation of what a theatre organist does is included, as well as the writer’s own explanation of what he observed as Kevin played. The article was written by Mary K. Miller, a writer and producer for the Exploratorium in San Francisco.

The museum has become aware of theatre organs because it now has a Wurlitzer in its musical instrument collection of the National Museum of American History. The organ, Opus 2070, a late style 190 (2/8) was originally installed in the Fox Theatre in Appleton, Wisconsin in 1929. The theatre was closed in 1959. Lowell Ayars, a music teacher and ATOS member, purchased it and installed it in his New Jersey home. Lowell died in 1992. Brant Duddy of ATOS arranged for Lowell’s estate to donate it to the Smithsonian. ATOS helped raise $80,000 or more for the installation of the organ in the museum. The installation is not yet complete.

ORGAN NOSTALGIA

Editor’s Introduction

The American Theatre Organ Enthusiasts, later to become ATOS, was organized in 1955 at Richard Simonet’s residence in North Hollywood. NORCAL members present were: Frank Bindt, Gordon Blanchard, Tiny James, Bob Jacobus, and Judd Walton, (who was elected Vice-President).

Dick Simonet became interested in theatre organ as a youth, when he was growing up in Seattle. He worked for several organ firms before moving to Los Angeles and acquiring the Muzak franchise for southern California in 1949. His spacious home in North Hollywood was completed in 1952. Within a year the installation of two organs was begun in the home.

A custom built 65 rank Aeolian-Skinner organ was installed in chambers which opened into the sloped-ceiling living room. The 4-manual draw-knob console was against the wall opposite the chambers. High on the side wall up near the ceiling was mounted a Positiv Division.

The home was on a sloping lot and the outside wall of the basement had curtained windows looking out at a stream which flowed into Toluca Lake. In the basement (which was reached via a circular staircase) was Richard’s 63 seat “Bijou Theatre”. At the back of the theatre was a projection booth equipped with several 35 mm commercial movie projectors. At the front of the theatre the movie screen was behind a red and white striped French curtain which raised vertically. Behind the movie screen was a single chamber containing 36 Wurlitzer and Hope-Jones ranks. The 4-manual black horseshoe console was custom built by Bill Bunch using the console shell, combination pneumatics and keyboards from the Hope-Jones Organ originally installed in St. Paul’s Cathedral in Buffalo, New York. The console was in the style of those at Radio City Music Hall, but it had 3 complete curved stop Richard Simonton was an amicable host and evangelist for theatre organ who welcomed all who promised an interest in organs. Twenty-five years ago, Rudy wrote to ask if it would be possible to see his theatre organ. In return, a written invitation for a Saturday evening was received. Fifty or more people in attendance were treated to a classical concert on the Skinner organ, followed by refreshments in a garden with a retractable roof. Following this intermission, guests were treated to a first-run film in the basement and a short theatre organ interlude. (Richard Simonton was a member of the Hollywood Film Archives Committee.) This was a typical and often repeated Saturday evening occurrence at the Simonton residence. The theatre organ was featured at several ATOS Annual conventions hosted by Los Angeles Chapter.

When the following article came to our attention, it filled a gap in our memory and answered the question of what happened to the Richard Simonton Wurlitzer after he passed away.

Former Simonton Organ

posted to the inter net by Jack Hardman

"Former Simonton Organ..." Reminds me of the house where we lived in New Jersey before selling the business and moving to larger quarters in Great Falls, Virginia. We lived in that house for nearly 30 years, but right up till we moved away, the old timers in town referred to our house as "the Volkening house" (never the Hardman house!)

Bob Pasalich [a member of LATOS who has a lot of inter net connections and spends a lot of time on the inter net, Ed.] asked me to respond to your inquiries about "the former Simonton Organ..." So here's a quick rundown on what has transpired since its removal from the Bijou Theatre several years ago.

The organ was shipped in one large Mayflower van from Hollywood to Great Falls. I did not keep the console Simonton used. It was sold to Mike Coup who shipped it directly to Wichita. Since I had been searching for an organ for a couple of years, and turned up nothing that seemed a close enough fit to my desires, I was beginning to think that I would have to piece together an instrument. So when Jasper made his first console available, I bought it. It had been restored and modified about 10 years earlier by Dave Junchen for what was to become Jasper's first organ installation in the music room of his residence in Barrington Hills. That room is now called the American Orchestration Room as I recall.

Junchen had installed Sydne SAMs and a Trousdale relay. When I got the console, much of the relay had been removed for reuse in Jasper's new 5 manual installation in the Victorian Music Palace. Because so much of the Trousdale relay was missing, I chose to abandon what was left, and use a Rickman Uniflex relay because of its inherent flexibility and many features. The console has been repainted and will get its gold leaf trim when the restoration is otherwise complete. About 100 stop tabs were replaced to comply with Simon's [Gledhill? Ed.] specification. This also required practical every SAM to be position shifted to get the Division Separators in the right spots. Big job! Simon added a number of ranks to reflect current design concepts as well as his personal preferences. We also added the missing ranks like the 16' octave Solo Tibia that never existed on the Simonton installation. There are 18 sets of reeds including a Wurlitzer Vox Chorus (probably of dubious musical value). Right now we are cleaning each reed pipe, leveling the shallots, and polishing the reeds. Very time consuming. The complete restoration per se took just over 3 years. We took a year off when nothing was done during Mildred's illness (cancer), and we are now finally nearing completion of installation phase. We are hoping to be ready for Clark Wilson to start tonal finishing this fall. Incidentally, our town of Great Falls, VA, is a residential suburb of Washington, DC, about 25 minutes west of the Smithsonian Mall. It is home to Great Falls National Park. While the falls don't exactly compete with Niagara Falls, they are pretty exciting, especially after a rain storm. The Potomac River drops some 70 feet over what is now named The Great Falls of the Potomac.

So there is a quick review of what's been going on with the organ.

Sanfilippo Curator Responds to "mega-organ" debate

Part 1 of 2

I feel that I should respond to some of these postings in the "Theatre Organ List" on the inter net, regarding the "mega-organ" syndrome and try to clear the air on some misunderstood points.

Jasper Sanfilippo was born during the depression of Italian immigrants. He was not born into wealth or comfort. He took over the very small family nut shelling business upon the death of his father in 1963. Through years of hard work, mechanical engineering inventiveness (he has an office wall full of patents), and superb business acumen, he transformed what was a modest food processing activity into the second largest nut processing company in the world.

It was only on a chance vacation in the mid-70's with his wife and five children to California with trips to Disneyland and Knott's Berry Farm, that he became exposed to automatic musical instruments such as nickelodeons, orchestrations, and band organs. He began to collect them and soon discovered that he required more room in which to display them. He met the late David Junchen in 1983, after his new (and far too narrow) instrument display... room was already constructed. He asked David to find him a theatre organ and to install it in this less-than-ideal setting. David and his crew did so and the result was a fine initial instrument (formerly of the Tucson Organ Stop Pizza, and already a conglomeration of other instruments) captured on CD on Ron Rhode's “Collage” album.

Jasper discovered that he derived greater pleasure from this Wurlitzer theatre organ than any other items he owned and likewise saw how thoroughly visitors enjoyed it, too. As early as 1987 Jasper and David Junchen began formulating the ideas of a new music room and, to quote David: "build the greatest theatre organ that there ever was." Jasper gave David free rein (and to quote one wag, "a water-cooled checkbook!") to fulfill this dream and Tom Hazleton and David prepared the specifications, as we now know them.

Over the next few years David acquired chests and pipework for this project from all over the country. None of this was in the form of smaller, individual organs "absorbed" into this new "mega-organ." David would find a chest here and a rank there until he had amassed, at the beginning of the installation, approximately 98 ranks of pipework and chests. There was a strange quirk about David (and I knew him for 30 years), he loved challenges... the harder the better. Certainly many of the chests in the present organ were in relatively fine shape when acquired, but a huge number of them were really in rough shape, and required extensive work to make them acceptable. There is no part of this instrument that was not refurbished, releathered, refinshed, etc. but all of us who were involved with its restoration and installation felt that a few less "dogs" would have been fine with us. All regulators (there are 53) were recovered and their valves restored. All tremulants (there are 41) were recovered and refinished. Where certain stops were unavailable, David had them made new by Meyer and Austin and Schopp, among others. He was able to borrow exquisite and rare E.M. Skinner ranks and have them duplicated. No detail was too small to attend to.

To be continued in the June issue.
