For those with long memories,

Jonas Nordwall holds a special place in Nor-Cal history as the artist who gave the inaugural concert of our then-new Berkeley’s Community Theatre Wurlitzer. If there was ever a concert that expressed the delight of an artist in exploring an instrument’s capabilities and showing off it’s range of voices—that was one. This gifted artist revealed much of the marvelous musical capability that the long hours of work undertaken by club members and then refined by professional organmen had brought to our community. We now have another opportunity to join with Sierras Chapter members and hear this fine artist reveal the distinct character of two very different Morton’s, the Hartzell’s installation in Lodi that is based on the original Castro Theatre instrument, and then the larger-scale Alhambra Theatre-based instrument installed in a fine listening room at Kautz’ Ironstone Vineyards.

For those who need a refresher on our artist’s background, and what he has brought to other organ venues, we offer the following capsule summary of this remarkable artist’s accomplishments in no particular order: For over three decades Jonas has toured the world presenting concerts in theatres, churches and performing arts centers. Based in the Pacific Northwest, Jonas serves as organist for the First United Methodist Church in Portland, Oregon. He has performed as soloist with several symphony orchestras, and has appeared on national television including the Today Show, Good Morning Australia and most recently the HG Network playing the Levine estate’s Wurlitzer at Gig Harbor, Washington. As a boy he took up playing keyboard instruments, moving to studies of organ and piano while in grade school. Pursuing musical study throughout his education, he eventually graduated from the University of Portland with a Bachelor of Music degree in organ performance. Somewhere along the line, the opportunity to take up the challenge of theatre organs presented itself because, during his college days, Jonas played many weekend intermissions at both the Oriental and Paramount Theatres in his native Portland, Oregon. Later, he had a 10-year tenure as the Senior Staff Organist for the Organ Grinder Corporation and produced many memorable recordings in both the Portland and Denver locations. To date, he has released over 25 recordings that reflect a variety of organ stylings and the character of many different instruments.
As his career developed he gained world-wide recognition as an adept theatre organ stylist, and received the ATOS Organist of the Year Award at the 1987 ATOS National Convention. Those who sign up and go will hear a gifted artist bring out the distinct character of these two very different instruments, each in a fine setting.

What distinguishes Morton Madness—and this is the tenth such that Nor-Cal and Sierra chapters have combined to produce—is the opportunity to get to know other members of both our chapters. I've always gone on this day trip in the company of other chapter members, and the opportunities to enjoy a bit of fellowship along the way make the travel times pass effortlessly. So when you sign up with Jack and get your tickets, make a few calls to other members to see if you can arrange to share the day with other members who might not otherwise think this concert is one they might be able to attend.

The Mysterious Organist
by Leon Fletcher

John Roland Redd became one of the world's most famous organists. But he was not who he led his audiences to believe he was.

He was an African-American born in Columbia, Missouri, on September 16, 1921. His mother, Doshia, was of Creole descent. His father, Ernest Redd, was pastor of the largest black church in Columbia. On that church's organ, John demonstrated that he was a child musical prodigy.

In the 1940's, John moved from Missouri to Southern California and worked as a pianist with several jazz groups. He changed his name to "Juan Rolando" and presented himself as Mexican. He played in various Los Angeles clubs and on the radio show "Chandu the Magician."

His Myth

Then John changed his name again—to Korla Pandit.

Now he claimed that he was born in New Delhi, India. He said that his father was a member of one of India's leading families. He maintained that his parents had sent him to study in England, and later, to the University of Chicago, where he supposedly enrolled when he was 13 years old.

In public, at least, he almost always wore a Naru jacket and a white turban with an oval jewel dangling just above his forehead. He said that attire portrayed the real him.

His TV Career

Shortly after California's first TV station, KTLA, Los Angeles, went on the air in September, 1947, Korla was selected to play organ to fill in between the many programs that were of irregular lengths.

Soon he had his own TV program. It was telecast three times a week, from 1949 to 1952. The opening line of his shows was, "Favorites of yours and mine, played on the heartstrings of time."

During his more than 900 TV shows he never spoke. His reason, he said: "I was speaking the universal language of music and that goes beyond all borders and languages."

But he often had his announcer deliver bits of Korla's pseudo-Eastern religious aphorisms: "Music is the golden union of east and west." "You're a mind with a body, not a body with a mind." "Music may not save your soul, but it will cause your soul to be worth saving."

On most of his shows he played a Hammond B-3 electronic organ. Often he'd play the organ with his left hand and a piano with his right hand.

He made at least 25 recordings. In 2000, two years after his death, Dejavu Records released a CD with 19 selections from his early recordings, including some of his own compositions—such as Turkish Dance and The Hypnotist.

In the 1980s, when I talked with Korla at a private party in Scotts Valley, he stared at me intently, spoke just above a whisper, seemed shy, solemn. But then, when the host asked him to play the home organ, he moved smartly to the organ bench, sat, begin to play, and instantly projected his distinctive public image and vitality.

The finale took full advantage of this Unit-Orchestra’s “throb factor”. Mr. Gorsuch claimed to be “uncomfortable” in the key of “B”, but you couldn’t prove it by his arrangement of Billy Strayhorn’s Lush Life, that was, in a word, “lush!” the first half closed with selections from the score to a never-produced Australian film, Fantasy [sic] with music by the very American Theatre Organist Lyn Larsen, for which Mr. Larsen wrote his haunting melody, Open Your Heart, one of five motifs Chris presented from this rarely-heard score.

Another bit of Larsen-y, Organ Stop Boogie, opened the second half. Lyn composed this ‘pedal-walker’ during his years as Staff Organist at the old Organ Stop Pizza on 7th St. in Phoenix, AZ. A Patsy Cline hit was next, Walkin’ After Midnight. Self-described as “tassel music”, this version obviously had Miss Cline walkin’ in the red-light district, an impression helped in no small measure by Berkeley’s Community Theatre lighting crew, who turned the theatre’s stage into a veritable brothel.

Fritz Kreisler’s Liebesfreud was full of Viennese-style ritards, cute 2nd touch Glock accent, and a flowing rhythm as infectious as a bottle of Mexican drinking water. I’ve Got The World On A String was “sung” ala Tony Bennett, and scored extra points for playing the verse, which this reviewer had never heard before. The relaxed “swing” feel at about 70 beats-per-minute, and the Pedal Cymbal against High-Hat in Accompaniment 2nd Touch were nice touches to a very attractive arrangement.

A huge medley closed the main show, A Tribute to George Wright which featured an astonishing number of some of Mr. Wright’s legendary arrangements, connected by Vibraphone segues ala radio-broadcasts.

Two encore followed: Dizzy Fingers, and for contrast, a nice laid-back number this reviewer did not recognize.

Mr. Gorsuch’s musicianship, warm personality, humor, and relaxed manner ensured that the good-sized crowd left the Theatre with a rosy glow that only a First-Class Artist with a First-Class organ in a First-Class venue can generate.

Kudos again to the lighting crew for their imaginative effects, and to all Nor-Cal officers for introducing the Bay Area to this wonderful San Diego master of the Theatre Organ.
