THE HONEST TAKE

We wanted to love this one. The idea behind the Pupsicle is genuinely clever, combining treat time with mental stimulation and enrichment. Unfortunately, after testing, the execution falls short of the promise, especially considering the price tag.

Even our “tester” Rosie gave up and just took a bath to wash away the disappointment.

WHAT'S THE DEAL?

The Pupsicle is an interactive treat-dispensing toy designed to keep dogs occupied by working to access frozen treats placed inside the toy. It's marketed as a long-lasting enrichment tool that provides mental stimulation while rewarding your dog with treats over time.

PRODUCT BENEFIT

Mental enrichment is the biggest benefit here. Dogs enjoy the challenge of working for their treats, which can help reduce boredom and provide a productive outlet for energy. For dogs that enjoy food puzzles and lick-based enrichment activities, the concept itself is appealing.

THE ONE HONEST DOWNSIDE

Cleaning this thing is a nightmare.

The interior contains multiple ridges and grooves that trap residue from melting treats, making thorough hand cleaning difficult. Unfortunately, tossing it into the dishwasher isn't a reliable solution either. During testing, the silicone material warped enough to make reassembling the toy frustrating and, in some cases, nearly impossible. At a price point ranging from roughly $20 to $90 depending on size and accessories, we expected a much more durable and user-friendly product.

BOTTOM LINE: PERFORMANCE MATTERS

We can't recommend the Pupsicle.

While the enrichment concept is solid, the maintenance issues and durability concerns outweigh the benefits. There are plenty of interactive toys and enrichment products on the market that are easier to clean, more durable, and offer better overall value for the money. For us, if a dog product can't stand up to regular cleaning and everyday use, it's hard to justify the investment.
