Starlight Therapeutic Riding Center has received a gift of $5,000 from the Warren Foundation for student scholarships to enable students the opportunity to participate in therapeutic horsemanship program at a reduced fee or at no cost to the participant, according to a press release from the center.

The pandemic has created increased stress and anxiety, and traditional therapies don't work for some children, said Starlight Executive Director Gina Friedman.

"We've seen an uptick in the number of parents who are seeking therapeutic horsemanship to improve their child's mental health, and we believe it's our responsibility to do more. Scholarship funds will bring Starlight one step closer in its goal to serve more people in the community with curriculum strategically designed to address mental health and wellness," she said.
