

GIVE ME A CHANCE by Walter L. Williams 2010

I miss you so much I just cannot express, I want you back here in my arms, I confess.

Is asking this such a sin? To let our old heartbreaks mend.

I know I used you in my own selfish way. But now I promise that your love I'll repay.

Is one more chance just too much? Oh I remember your touch.

I know I used you in my own selfish way. But now I promise that your love I'll repay.

Is one more chance just too much? Oh I remember your touch.

I realize all the mistakes that I made, And hope that all your past resentments can fade.

This is not easy I know; I just cannot let you go.

I'll never fail you or neglect you again. This time my fervor for you will never end.

My heart is clear now, it's true. All my affection's for you.

If you will let me, I'll assure you today, That I will try in every meaningful way,

So that you'll never look back, And think about what you lack.

Instead I want you as our futures unfold, To know with certainty the love that I hold.

I give my promise to you. The dedication you're due.

I'll feel so lucky if you just give to me. A chance to demonstrate my firm guarantee,

That you'll always surely know. How deeply I love you so.

Come walk together in the sweet summer breeze. Just you and me dear, we can feel such at ease.

I want for you nothing less, Than your complete happiness.

Give me a chance. Please, I'm begging you now,

It's so simple to try.

Give a chance, just a little bit darling, don't condemn me cause I want your vow.

Just one more chance, please I'm begging you dear,

I can't ask any more.

If you grant, this great wish of my lifetime, I'll make heaven for you, right here.
