ECOARTS PROGRAM

UNIT 3.1

Pop Art on the Farm

The Pop Art of the 1960's often commented on popular culture with images of commonplace objects. Today, when we buy our food it is often covered in icons — symbols — that tell us about how that food was farmed.

In this project, students created art in the style of Andy Warhol to represent what kind of icons they would want to see on their food.

Many of them invented their own, or added regenerative agriculture as a label they would want to see.

The younger age groups made their own seed packets - complete with seeds to sow!

VOCAB

Regenerative Agriculture: Restoring farmland to optimal health with better farming practices.

Soil: A black or dark brown material in which plants grow - typically consisting of a mixture of organic remains, clay, and rock particles.

Silvopasture: Pastures strewn or crisscrossed with trees sequester five to ten times as much carbon as those of the same size that are treeless.

Icon: A simplified picture used to represent a concept or object.

Font: An art form, where each letter in a phrase or quote acts as an illustration.

Art Technique

Artistic Lettering

We learned how to incorporate new and exciting artistic letters into our art pieces. We added swirls, bubbles and block letters galore!

Artist Influencer: Andy Warhol

By the 1960s, the New York art world was in a rut, the very original and popular canvases of the Abstract Expressionists of the 1940s and '50s had become cliché. Warhol was one of the artists that felt the need to bring back imagery into his work. The gallery owner and interior designer Muriel Latow gave Warhol the idea of painting soup cans, when she suggested to him that he should paint objects that people use every day (it is rumored that Warhol ate the soup for lunch every single day).
