

Why join?

A local network of communicators in one of the most dynamic markets for our profession

Seattle has so many world-class companies and thought leaders. Be part a community being created by communicators to connect us to the latest exciting thinking in our field and support our development. Connect to other professionals, potential mentors, or potential employers, and shine in your field through:

- Networking events
- Webinars with local experts
- Opportunities for board leadership or volunteering
- Awards that can highlight your work

The only professional association with international credibility

Seattle is a global city with a global outlook. Only IABC provides an internationally-recognized professional accreditation through the Global Communication Certification Council (GCCC®). Our Communication Management Professional (CMP) and Strategic Communication Management Professional (SCMP) certifications, including the continuing professional development requirement, are based on the Global Standard for communication professionals. Depending on your years and experience level in the profession, both could help you differentiate yourself in Seattle's competitive professional landscape.

Our worldwide and US regional conferences also provide ways to connect to professionals around the world.

Help create the community for Seattle communicators that YOU envision

IABC recently celebrated its 50th anniversary as the only truly global association connecting communications professionals. Now, with a re-launched Seattle chapter, you can get involved in shaping a community that works for you. Board and volunteer positions can be valuable resume builders for any career stage and help you make meaningful personal and professional connections that enhance your career and reconnect you to your passion for communications.

Learn more

Email hello@iabc.com to reach out to our Board leadership, who will be happy to share more.

If you're ready to join us, visit IABC.com > Join.