Leavenworth Riverfest July 26

The Crawford County Historical & Genealogical Society set up a booth this year at the festival after several years of absence. The weather was hot and humid and we had no tent, so we left early in the afternoon. Our 4 hours of operation netted the sale of two cookbooks. Working the booth were Densil & Sandra Wilson, Richard & Priscilla Eastridge and Larry & Helena Burmeister.

Report On The Proctor House Yard Sale

On Thursday, July 3rd the group met at the Proctor House to set up for the yard sale on Friday and Saturday. The sale was conducted on Friday and Saturday in the usual rainy conditions. With all the hard work by the membership the organization netted a little over $2,300. Not to much when you consider it will cost us about $1000 to repair each window of the Proctor house! And again this year, the suggestion among the workers was "we have to find something less work intensive for next year". And again this year, we disposed of over half of what was offered for sale. All the workers deserve a vote of thanks, and we appreciate all those who came and purchased items at the sale.

I-house — Find No. 11

When you look at this abandoned house, what do you see? Do you envision an Alfred Hitchcock movie or a run-down eyesore? To the surveyor from Historic Landmarks Foundation of Indiana, the answer was neither. This vacant house garnered an 'Outstanding' rating – our highest – and deservedly so. Called the James R. Newton House, this building will be included in the upcoming Crawford County Interim Survey Report.

Located on Eckerty-Doolittle Road in Johnson Township, the Newton House dates to the Civil War-era, circa 1860, and was undoubtedly a fine home

Lewis B. Walls, A Third Person Account

By Lisa Webb

Gramma always said that when she was a girl they “got their water right out of the creek”. That was Anderson Creek near Eckerty in Crawford County Indiana on what is now Hoosier Forest land. But in the 1800s, that creek ran through land owned by Gramma’s daddy, Lewis B. Walls.

In our (mother and I) search for any tidbit we could find about our Crawford County ancestors, we came across some interesting stories about Lewis B. To start with, in November of 1869, he and his wife, Sarah Elizabeth (McKenzie), platted out a town on that land by the creek. New Louisville, it was called (Or should it have been New Lewisville?). They had heard that the new railroad was going to be built right through their property. They must have been sorely disappointed when the railroad missed them by a literal mile. Instead of going through New Louisville, it was built about a mile away, going right through Eckerty.

It’s amazing to me how people got around so much in those days. Around 1843, when he was 17, Lewis was hunting in Iowa when he got caught in a blizzard so severe that his feet were frozen. He had to have part of his legs amputated below the knees. Soon after he was told that he needed another operation or he would die from gangrene. He had to have been used to hard living, being among the early settlers, but its hard to imagine how he must have suffered. He refused the second operation, saying he couldn’t stand to go through it again. He’d rather die! But, thankfully, when he was told that an anesthetic was now available, Lewis agreed to the second operation, which was successful.

He learned to walk on his knees wearing leather pads that laced in the back, behind his knees. He made them himself. In later years, he tried to wear artificial feet and legs, but for some unknown reason that didn’t work out.

In spite of being so handicapped, he was a diligent boy who became a versatile, self-made man. Farming was probably too difficult because of his limitations. It would have been hard to even harness the horses; oxen would have been even worse. He found other ways to make a living, though. He taught school for many years in Orange, Dubois and Crawford counties. We also know that he taught music, possibly giving lessons for a fee. He served as a trustee in Crawford County in 1868 and again in 1877. He was post-

He identified nine of the twelve people, left to right: William Lewis Belcher, his wife Zena, Alexander Goldman, Victoria Suddarth Belcher, John Wesley Belcher, unknown, James Highfill, Lucinda Highfill, unknown, unknown, “Sweet Stroud” Lankford, and Mary Lankford. in its day. With its distinctive I-house massing – two stories tall and one room deep – and second floor entrance directly over the first, it is called a “stacked” I-house. The house retains its original decorative window molding and some original windows (the rest are broken out), two chimneys, and a two-story portico. Despite its current condition, this house suffers no alterations to its original design, and thus garnered an ‘Outstanding,’ and is likely eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places.

The project was partially funded by a grant from the National Park Service and is administered by the Indiana DNR’s Division of Historic Preservation and Archaeology. master at Eckerty for a short time, before it was called Eckerty. He was also a merchant who kept a store in the Anderson City area, or New Louisville, there on Anderson Creek (By the way, Anderson Creek used to be called Anderson River. What happened to it?).

Lewis B.’s wife, Sarah, must have been a lot of help to him, that is, when she had a spare moment from caring for their eight children, the youngest of which was my great-grandmother Nancy Lillie Fannie Walls. She was born in 1878, three years before her mother died. Gramma didn’t remember much about her mother, but my mother can recall her speaking of her stepmother, Ann, or Annie. They had one child, Gramma’s little brother, Jesse, whom she adored and often spoke of.

There lies a mystery in this story. We have facts. We have my mother’s memories. And we have an old Bible with family births, deaths and marriages hand written by several different hands. According to official records, after Sarah died, Lewis married Annie M. Morgan in 1882. There is no mention of her in the family Bible. Then, in 1883, according to official records, he married again to Maria A. Morgan. This union is recorded in the family Bible. But, Gramma only spoke of Annie. What is going on here? Could Annie M. be Annie Maria? And could Maria A. be Maria Ann? They sound like they are probably the same person. But, what about the official records?

They were churchy people , which was the norm back then. His name aptained by some of his relatives. Mr. Yates has an excellent website with the history of his family and its related lines connected to Crawford County. This website can be accessed by going on the Crawford County Historical and Genealogical website; www.cchgs.org and click on the links tab.

Mr. Yates states that of 600,000 soldiers who died in the Civil War, 402,000 died of disease and accidents. Of nine members of his line who died, 7 died of disease and 2 in battles. He told of one ancestor who lost her husband in the war of sickness and 10 days later lost her baby brother from complications of measles that were left untreated. He has done very extensive research on his ancestors.

After a short recess the meeting was called to order and a motion was made by Densil Wilson, president, that the minutes be accepted as written and Edith Key seconded the motion. Motion passed.

Evelyn Jackson stated that Peggy Brooks said we would be eligible for a State Grant.

Densil suggested that we could possibly get an estimate of the number of hours involved with the grant.

It was stated that the Proctor House Committee meeting held on Monday, Aug. 4. was very productive and will be discussed at the next meeting.

A few last words about my great-great grandfather, Lewis B. Walls. I have his portrait. It's an 18"x22" photograph in an old, dusty antique-white Victorian frame. And I have his old chair, which I'm told was made in Birdseye. They make me feel closer to him. I often stare into his face in the portrait, trying to see something of the inner man, to see beyond the disguise of old age. He had blue eyes. But, I also think I see something internal—loving-kindness...and integrity. Gramma would agree, I'm sure, because my mother always said, "Gramma loved her daddy."
