Do You Have RHUBARB?

Is your Rhubarb ready to harvest? Or do you know someone that needs help harvesting their rhubarb to give to Lord's Acre pies? We hope as your rhubarb is ready, you will pull, cut up into 1/2" pieces, freeze on cookie sheets, and then bag.

Be sure to put a label on them.

By freezing on cookie sheets we can use the fruit as needed and it will make much better pies than a solid bag of fruit. If you don't have room to store in your freezer, please bring with you next time you come to church. Thank you in advance for this contribution to Lord's Acre pies. If you have any questions or need help please contact Amber T. or Kristi D. (541) 548-3066.

Thank you, all of the volunteers who set-up, tore down, cooked, and our table and session leaders. It truly would not have happened without you.

Financial Planning Ministry

God asked us to be good and faithful stewards of the resources He entrusts to us. Powell Butte Christian Church and OCEF is offering a seminar through OCEF's partner Family Planning Ministry. Estate planning is often overlooked as a means for good stewardship. Regardless of your financial position or age, every adult should have an effective estate plan that includes future distribution of resources, outlines important medical decisions, and provides for the guardianship of minor children.

57% of U.S. adults do not currently have estate planning documents and two-thirds have no living will or other advanced directive. These documents typically cost between $1,500 - $4,000.

Do you know where you can get these documents for FREE?

Do you want to understand more about Estate Planning? Do you want to know why everyone needs a will? Do you have other questions...Do I need a Trust? Do I need a Power of Attorney? How can I avoid costly mistakes like probate?

If you answer yes, then you will want to come to this seminar from Financial Planning Ministry. In order to obtain your FREE secure documents, you will need to attend this seminar in order to get your special code to access documents. A Family Planning Ministry Estate Consultant helps you through the entire process. FMP is approved by the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability and has a Better Business Rating of A+. Feel free to take a look at their website: <https://www.fpm.org>

Steve Carter, Stewardship Pastor of Southeast Christian Church in Kentucky says that the FMP seminar "empowers people with practical guidance based on Biblical foundation of stewardship. Many of our members are benefiting from their invaluable estate planning service which is helping them to leave a legacy that honors God in advance of his kingdom." Reserve your spot at the seminar today by signing up in the foyer. For further information contact Susan Rath at 541-548-3066.

How to Help When Your Teen Falls Behind in School (Part 2)

by

Amy Morin, LCSW

Updated on August 12, 2020

Fact checked by Sean Blackburn

In high school, harder concepts are introduced, more work is assigned, and the expectations are higher than ever—and that doesn't even take into account the stress of non-academic pursuits, such as sports, clubs, jobs, and friends.

With all the pressure piled onto today's teenagers, it's no surprise that some start to get in trouble with their schoolwork. Teens who fall behind may fall into a pattern of poor test grades, incomplete homework, and failing grades.

While you can't force your teen to do their work, you can offer a little extra support to help them. With your help, they should be able to catch up on homework before they fall behind too much.

Meet With Your Teen's Teachers

Your teen's teachers might have already called you if they noticed a drastic downturn in performance, but if they haven't, schedule a one-on-one with them as soon as possible. If your teen is doing poorly in more than one subject, see if you can set up a group meeting rather than visiting the teachers individually.

In some cases, the teacher might have tried to remedy the problem with your teen already and is turning to you because that strategy didn't work. At the meeting, ask teachers if they've noticed any changes in your teen's mood or behavior. Often, instructors see a part of your child at school that you don't see at home, particularly as it relates to friends or a dating relationship.

They might have insight as to the root problem. Keep in mind that some information the teacher gives you might surprise you, and it might even make you upset.

Teachers may say your child simply isn't trying or that they're "lazy." Remember that it's not an attack on your parenting skills or your child's character, but rather an observation as to what's going on at school.

Ask for Resources

Your teen's teachers will likely have support available to your student, both in and out of school. They might hold study hours after school or offer to meet privately with your teen to help them review material before a test.

Teachers might know about tutoring groups that meet in the school library or have a recommendation for a tutor whose services are provided outside the school. If your teen is having difficulty in one particular subject, rather than overall, a tutor might be the smartest option. Just one session a week can make a big difference in the overall understanding of a topic.

Create a Routine

It can be hard to create a structure for your teen's life if they are already fairly independent. But setting aside a clear homework time could help them develop better self-discipline.

Establish clear study time rules too, such as no cellphones. Turn off the TV and have your teen set up a work in a quiet place that's easily accessible to you rather than behind a closed bedroom door where you can't see what happens.

Implement a routine as it pertains to your child's sleep patterns, as well as a morning routine. Teens need 8 to 10 hours of sleep each night and failing to get that can lead to academic issues.

A morning routine can also help start your teen's day off properly so they are not feeling rushed or stressed and can better focus once the bell rings.

Offer Incentives

Some families aren't comfortable rewarding good grades. But some teens feel motivated to work a little harder if there's something special on the line. It might be something as simple as being able to go out a little later than curfew on a weekend or something bigger, like being able to use the car.

Talk to your teen about what they would like to earn. Then, discuss how you'll know when they are on track. Getting all of their homework done on time for a week might lead to an extra privilege. Or, getting caught up on the work they were behind on might lead to more fun activities on the weekend.

If you or your son or daughter are interested in seeking support from this ministry, please contact Suzan at pbcc@powellbuttechurch.com, or leave a message with Jeanne at the church office.
