

PRESS RELEASE

Thursday 10 December 2020

Future Health is a Singapore based healthtech angel investment group made up of an established network of hand-picked investors with unparalleled global experience in finance, technology and healthcare.

“Healthcare should be affordable and accessible to everyone.”

Singapore based Angel Investment group announced today that Kun Jiang has been appointed as an Advisor to their business. Kun is a health-tech founder and CEO. She successfully sold her company BioMark, a digital diagnostics business in 2020. Before she became an entrepreneur, she was an investment banker and a private equity investor with a focus on healthcare.

Ms Jiang said, “I think Future Health and its members can play an important role in nurturing the fledging health-tech ecosystems in the region, and I’m looking forward to supporting startups to solve some of the most pressing problems in healthcare.”

“We are very honoured and excited to have Kun onboard. She brings extensive investment banking and healthtech startup experienced that will be invaluable to our members and startup founders,” said, co-founders, Aga Manhao and Aleem Jivraj.

About Future Health

Future Health’s angel investment group identifies early-stage healthtech companies based in Asia or looking to expand their business into the region. The group facilitates the growth and development of its portfolio companies by making introductions to its extensive global network, assisting in business development, strategic planning, and mentoring. Future Health plays a leading role in building the healthtech ecosystem by organising events and seminars and establishing cross border healthtech relationships with likeminded groups and associations.

Future Health is based in Singapore as the leading location in Asia for entrepreneurial start-ups, given its stability, modern infrastructure, and support for innovation. The group has been contributing to the growth of Singapore and Asia overall by spurring economic growth and creating new employment opportunities.

To find out more about Future Health please contact us at hello@futurehealth.asia