Future Health is pleased to announce their investment in reach52.

reach52 is a social enterprise that delivers affordable healthcare that services the 52% of the world that still cannot access or afford healthcare. That is over 3.7 billion people, resulting in lives lost and lost potential of communities, government, business and the world.

For all the talk of increasing access to medicines, progress is too slow. Digital health is not being adopted quickly enough - costs are increasing, approaches too siloed. Simply enhancing existing healthcare systems does not go far enough for the world's poorest communities. reach52 are reinventing how health systems work, establishing community-run health services and marketplaces that reach the 52% with affordable healthcare when and where they need it.

"reach52 has always been a partnership driven organisation. Future Health is thus a fantastic partner for us – bringing both capital but also a network of individuals that get what we are trying to do, and can add strategic insights and support as we scale up in Asia and beyond" said Edward Booty, CEO of reach52.

"We are delighted to be able to invest in reach52. One of Future Health's aim was to invest in companies that focused on the accessibility and affordability of healthcare for everyone. We believe that reach52 are doing a great job of this by helping over 3 million people in 500 communities across 5 countries in Asia." said Mr Aga Manhao and Mr Aleem Jivraj, co-founders of Future Health

Future Health is a Singapore based healthtech angel investment group made up of experienced investors with unparalleled global experience in finance, technology and healthcare. Future Health's angel investment group identifies early stage healthtech companies based in Asia or looking to expand their business into the region. The group facilitates the growth and development of its portfolio companies by making introductions to its extensive global network, assisting in business development, strategic planning, and mentoring. Future Health plays a leading role in building the healthtech ecosystem by organising events and seminars, and establishing cross border healthtech relationships with likeminded groups and associations.
