Addressing The Housing Needs For Refugees Fleeing War Torn Countries

Introduction

“ Today millions of people are forced to leave their countries due to the threat of violence, seeking refuge in countries where they often lack safe and stable housing.” A refugee is any internationally recognized person and or group forced to leave their native country due to fear of persecution or of their lives.

There is currently an international crisis concerning the housing and care of millions of refugees. A majority of these refugees come from countries in the Middle East and South America and these refugees choose to overload their neighboring countries with refugees. These countries likely aren't prepared to handle this massive amount of people.

There have been attempts by multiple countries and organizations to combat this issue. The UN-habitat has partnered with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to try and end this substantial crisis.

Proposed Plans

United States of America:

The United States' proposed plan to combat the housing shortage for refugees coming from war torn countries is to establish a global program that assigns refugees to certain countries on the country's resources. They will do this by creating said program for interested parties to assign refugees based on capacity. More developed countries will bring in more refugees while smaller countries with less resources to work with bring in what they can. Along with this, according to the United States' plan, a global world bank will be created to combat issues like this which will fund causes and ideas like the one proposed to help resolve the issues faster.

Germany:

The German's perspective is different compared to other countries. Since Germany is already doing such a big part in helping refugees by housing around 3 million refugees in their borders. 1 million of them originally come from Ukraine because of the _Ukrainian-Russo war that has been raging on for 3 years now. Instead of a established plan, the Germans could be a part of a cause such as what the Americans proposed and assist in the creation of the world bank, and the distribution of refugees all around the world.

Russia:

The delegation of Russia wanted to focus on insuring equitable solutions for the housing of refugees. The delegate of Russia was planning to create a subcommittee to focus on case specific housing needs. Russia would randomly select a host country from a pool of 30 viable host countries. These host countries would host the refugees for a period of 2-3 years based off of each scenario. “A leaky roof is housing, an overcrowded disease ridden home is housing but it doesn't meet basic human needs.

Conclusion

In conclusion, most of the world agreed upon the same things. There needed to be more refugee centers internationally to compensate for the influx of refugees traveling from war torn countries. The world agrees that all countries and people need to come together to fight against this problem as it is a issue that is recognized and real everywhere. Collaboration and strengthening international relations is crucial to solving this problem effectively and quickly.
