

Large retreat at Camp IAWAH this weekend MUSIC VOLUME WILL BE KEPT TO A MINIMUM

This weekend (May 28 and May 29) Camp IAWAH is hosting a large group, who will be playing and listening to classical themed music at certain time slots. Ken Vissers, the new executive director, was so kind to inform us about the possibility of loud music coming from the camp grounds.

Ken Vissers: "Normally, this retreat happens in the fall, after the leaves are down, which means the sound tends to carry much further. However, even though we now have a buffer with the tree canopy, the group has been instructed that any outdoor speakers must face away from the lake and the volume kept down. We will do our best to keep things relatively quiet."

Although sound is a usually natural part of our surroundings, the camp director is well aware of the fact that sounds can become unwanted and (too) loud for other cottagers and residents alike, and that it can turn into noise pollution around the lake. That is why he will be keeping us updated on other event this season. He promises he will be giving us a heads-up well before the date of other possible events where loud(er) music might be an issue. THANKS KEN

What neighbours heard so far, not an issue at all.
