

These sentences changed my life's course from a shit show to the absolute top echelon.

“The best of life is reserved for those who are willing to fight for it.”

“You could be great, you know that, right?”

At first listen, I didn't think much of them. Then, as you do when you sit around being a lazy piece of crap, as I was at that time- they started to kick the hell out of my ass.

I realized the gravity of not taking action and letting my life pass by.

I cried probably for a solid two hours, thinking about all those wasted hours feeling sorry for myself and regretting all my decisions to stay down.

But all this was an absolute necessity, a needed wake-up call to get me back on track.

That's why when I say struggles come your way, be grateful- life is finally ready for you.

Nothing you imagine is too out of reach, no amount of money, no amount of stress.

It's never enough to stop any of us.

But that power, that resilience, only shows itself to those who search for it. Period.

If you play the game of “Oh, when it's my time, I'll get what I deserve,” yeah, you will, but it won't be success.

It will be cold, hard failures, one after another.

Playing defense does not work with life.

You want something? You go after it. You don't rest until you get your hands on it.

The ability to be relentless in the pursuit of greatness is a trait that most people want but will never get.

Why?

Because of the lingering doubts.

When that particular person asked me the above question, I chuckled and said, "Yeah, right."

He got furious at me.

I asked him, "Why, dude? What did I do?" and he replied, "If I have to tell you, you'll never recognize it."

And once I mulled it over, I realized that I was my own biggest enemy.

I understood that what I said against myself was unforgivable.

And that's what you all need to realize as well.

We all have greatness buried within us, but to bring it out, as it is with any hidden treasure, the journey is treacherous, full of pain and multiple failures.

But if you can survive that journey, I'll say,

“Get ready for a whole different level of life, 'cause you'll be unstoppable.”
