

For Client Use

Remember: A Key Risk of using AI for career transition research is relying on inaccurate or outdated labor market information, which can lead to unrealistic career expectations or costly decisions.

Always conduct a ‘Human-in-the-Loop evaluation’ which is a critical review process for verifying (auditing) AI-generated content or assessing recommendations for career transition research.

Note: When using AI tools, consider using ‘Temporary Chat’ mode to reduce the retention of your conversations. Avoid entering sensitive personal information and review the privacy settings of your preferred AI tool. ‘Temporary Chat’ mode in your preferred AI chat app often appears as a button in the top right corner when starting a new chat window.

Step 1

Identify your current occupation, the career you are considering transitioning into and your preferred employment location.

Step 2

Prepare a summary of your relevant work experience, education, transferable skills, career goals, and personal circumstances that may influence your decision.

Step 3

Use the AI prompt to compare both occupations, including employment prospects, labour market trends, qualification requirements, and potential opportunities or challenges associated with the transition.

Step 4

Verify AI-generated information using reliable Canadian labour market sources, such as Job Bank, provincial labour market reports and professional regulatory bodies. Consider how the findings align with your career goals, financial needs, and personal circumstances before making a decision.
