

A Bird-Extinct

My mind completely inhibited
By the wondrous collection of birds
That have enveloped various regions of our world
The magnificent wing spread of bountiful colors
Representing species of different insurmountable numbers
If only we could bring them back to life
Or find them in a secret part of our hemisphere
A group still in existence
Hidden from the dangerous perils of life
The amazing features characteristic of each one
With splendid colors of plumage
Hoping the remaining species left
Will never be extinct in our time
But continue to beautify our world forever
They fly higher and higher
And their songs thrill the senses to ecstasy
Their beaks so distinctive in size
And prehistoric like webbed feet for their necessity

Amazement of nature

Renata Dawidowicz

Thrilling to behold

How each bird is unique

There are no imitations

Published in: "The Taylor Trust"

On page 68- Volume 2-April-June 2009

On-Line-"The Taylor Trust: Poetry & Prose"-2009

