

Changes

Nestled by warm sandy beaches
Erect and prominently situated among the straggles of greenish grass
Intermingled with withered grayish strands
Time eclipsed away and remnants still stand
Being restored for posterity
The lighthouse is a warm invitation
To follow the old steel narrow swirling steps to inspect a time past
The light keeper's dwelling is cozy with a huge remarkable stone fireplace
To keep the winter chills away the lighthouse was well fortified
Lonely and solitary on winter nights as the snow bundled the landscape
No exit out as the wide stretches of the lake were incapacitated with ice
Time has erupted to conquer all life and the magic of existence continues
All secrets have been dispersed and only the wild whispering of the wind is heard now

Renata Dawidowicz

Published in: "The Taylor Trust"

Volume 3- on page 49- July-September 2009

On-Line- "The Taylor Trust: Poetry & Prose"-2009

