In the port of Ketchikan, Alaska, USA

Arrival time: 7.00am | All aboard time: 4.30pm

Port Highlights

Nestled among some of Alaska's most arresting scenery, Ketchikan's location is one to both admire and leverage. Tiny Ketchikan is just three miles long and three blocks wide, but here you can be sure to find Alaska's busiest waterfront buzzing with boat planes, fishing boats, pleasure craft, and busy fishermen. Once colonised by Tlingit and Haida tribes, Ketchikan is a thriving fishing town with colourful stilted houses, a rich Alaskan culture and a throng of trawlers hauling in fresh crab and salmon. Arts thrive here and museums celebrating the town's history are abundant. Some of the best seafood you will sample in the Great Land will have been plucked directly from Ketchikan's waters and served in its restaurants just hours later. A detail that only magnifies the appeal of this enchanting port call on your Alaska voyage. While other towns have their origins firmly rooted in the region's gold rush years, Ketchikan's connection with its native population is still at the heart of its community. You will find Alaska's largest collection of totem poles among its many welcoming attractions, along with heritage experiences expanding on the beliefs, customs and pastimes of Alaska's earliest settlers. Many visitors to Ketchikan use the city as a base from which to visit Misty Fjords National Monument, just 22 miles east of the city. Part of the Tongass National Forest, Misty Fjords is one of Southern Alaska's most beautiful natural wonders, combining sheer sea cliffs, towering rock faces and expansive fjords. On Creek Street, you will find welcoming independent galleries offering collections of native Alaskan art, as well as Dolly's House museum where Ketchikan's most famous resident, Dolly Arthur, once resided.

Visiting Alaska

A Note from the Naturalist

There's a saying in Alaska, when a pine needle falls in the forest, the eagle sees it, the deer hears it and the bear smells it. For bald eagles this is certainly true. Their eyesight is around eight times better than ours and they can spot prey from a distance of two miles. Along the Inside Passage, the extensive shoreline, old growth forests and healthy salmon runs provide ideal bald eagle habitat. Consequently, their numbers are robust throughout the region.

Did you know?

Bald eagles return to the same nesting sites year after year and usually mate for life.

Protecting Alaska

Cunard kindly asks that while ashore, guests take care in disposing of litter, especially edible items. Special bear proof waste bins can be found in most of the ports we visit. These have been put in place to ensure that any trash is not accessible to the region's wildlife.

The Alaska Outpost Desk

Dr Rachel Cartwright will be in the Garden Lounge on Deck 9, midships from 4.30pm until 6.00pm for all your questions about Alaska.
