HOW DID MOTHER'S DAY START?

After the civil war, organizer Ann Jarvis started a committee to foster community between mothers on both sides of the war. She began "Mother's Friendship day." Julia Ward Howe also wrote a "Mother's Day proclamation" to promote peace.

Ann's daughter later changed the day to honor her own mother.

SALLY CHANG

Expect the unexpected from Sally Chang this year at Studio 7 on the 2023 Camano Island Studio Tour this month. Chang, who has been handbuilding pottery for 30+ years and has been on the last ten tours, is on the verge of retirement. Among perennial favorites such as her popular six bowl sets (pictured in cerulean), visitors to the studio will find a few curiosities created from and for a variety of past projects. Some of these items include molds and stamps, which themselves are interesting decorative pieces, previously used by the artist on clay, paper, and fabric projects. There will also be some unique ceramic tiles available. Sally looks forward to greeting you. Her studio is open May 12-14, the first weekend of the tour only.

CHICKEN ART

My name is Skeeter Daddle and I'm an art alcoholic. Stained glass art, to be specific. And now a chicken artist, to be precise. We hopeless addicts find ourselves in baffling and unpredictable predicaments, victims of the vicissitudes of economic necessities. Over the years I've made windows to keep neighbors from peering into clients' bathrooms while they do their 'business', I've created art for kitchen cabinets that prevent viewing their mismatched dishware, I've designed murals for schools in red-leaning areas of the state that weren't really wanted but were offered as part of a 1% for art program by our leftist government here in Washington. In other words I go where the money leads, no need to prove the adage of 'starving artist.'

Just before the Covid plague swept the client base pretty much flat, I got a commission to do the neighbors' barn, a series of five fairly sizeable windows that faced their new house. They seemed hesitant to ask me, assuming no doubt that Picasso wouldn't paint the side of an outhouse if his neighbor asked, but ... like I said, pride is not one of my virtues or vices. Art is art and barn art works just fine for me. And besides, most of my large scale glass murals in the realm of public art commissions were drawn on that barn's loft floor once the hay bales were moved to the sides. It was actually an honor to do those barn windows.

So when the same neighbors' broached the idea of another window up at the barnyard, this time for a chicken coop, you can guess, rightly, that I jumped at the opportunity. Chickens need art too, you know, and maybe you didn't know that a happy hen is a good layer. I suggested piping in classical music, create a veritable chicken cathedral up there, get ready to corner the egg market of the South End. So I accepted the challenge, happy to focus on something other than geo-politics, inflation, pandemic paranoia and partisan warfare. I can now turn my attention to a design that will maximize egg production. And hopefully not make the goats jealous of their cackling brethren.

Local Stories and Poetry

MY MOTHER, MY HERO

Heroes don't always wear capes, they wear uniforms with pockets full of change from working 2 jobs, one at the local diner and one at the fancy restaurant that overlooked the sea. Alone she raised 9 children, my Mother with very little means but she did what she had to do with gritted knuckled grace, and heroes don't always wear capes.

They wear aprons and brooms and scrapes, from pliers, and wires, and changing tires, but not capes.

They bake, they take you to school when you miss the bus. They do whatever it takes, they sometimes cuss, they do. So would you.

Make no mistake, heroes don't always wear capes.

HAPPY NO PANTS DAY!

I love the month of May. It's one of my 12 favorite months. Flowers are blooming. Summer is around the corner. And the air is thick with the sweet aroma of fresh-cut grass (not from my yard, mind you – I usually wait until mid-August to break out the mower – or whenever my wife gets fed up and threatens to make us visit her relatives for a week – whichever comes first).

Perhaps one of my favorite aspects of this month involves all the fun holidays that are observed. Of course, there are the major holidays like Star Wars Day on May 4th (so named because then you can say "May the 4th be with you").

Right on the heels of Star Wars Day comes the always festive holiday Cinco de Mayo, observed on May 5th. I'm not sure what this holiday was originally meant to celebrate. I'm guessing something to do with Mexico's longstanding love affair with mayonnaise as a condiment.

Then there's Mother's Day. But that holiday is only celebrated by people who have moms. Feel free to skip that minor holiday – unless you have a mom or are married to one, in which case, you'd better not forget the date like I did last year. My wife still hasn't forgiven me. In my defense, the Goodyear 400 NASCAR race was on Fox Sports so I had a very full plate that day.

What many people may not know is that May has several other slightly more obscure holidays every bit as fun as Cinco de Mayonnaise and Start Wars Day. If you're looking for reasons to play hooky, why not tell your boss you won't be able to make it into work because you're celebrating one of these lesser known holidays?

No Pants Day (May 5th)

Like most great holidays, it was started by a bunch of drunk college kids as a prank. It celebrates the freedom from having to conform to a society that requires men to wear pants. It first appeared when a bunch of University of Texas students decided to take off their pants right after finals and parade around campus in their underwear. Surprisingly, not one of the students who instigated this craze has ever won a Nobel Prize – although several apparently went on to distinguished careers as members of the Texas State Legislature. If you've never previously tried alcohol, this might be an excellent day to start.

National Talk Like Yoda Day (May 21st)

This holiday was first created in 2003, inspired by the Jedi master's wisdom and wit. Fans celebrate this important annual tradition by coming together and mimicking the way Yoda talks. On this day, you'll hear people all over the world – and by "people" I mean males in their twenties who haven't had a date in a long time – speaking words of supposed great intellect using Yoda's unusual, high-pitched voice and convoluted sentence structure.

I celebrated this special day last year by asking my wife questions in the style of the diminutive Star Wars character incessantly all day long. I remember the day clearly because my wife screamed, "Oh my God. I'm married to a seven-year-old!" To which I eruditely replied, "My talking this way annoying you, dear, is it?" Then she made me sleep on the couch. A fan of Yoda not everyone is, concluded I.

National Lost Sock Memorial Day (May 9th)

Some geniuses decided it was a brilliant idea to set aside one day each year to commemorate all the socks we've lost over the decades. What happened to them? How did they meet their tragic fate? Will they ever be reunited in sock heaven?

Now there's a holiday to help us honor the memory of these dear departed feet coverings. Even though this holiday technically falls in May, I've found that whenever I accidentally show up for a formal, special occasion wearing one black sock and one dark blue one, I simply mention that I'm doing my small part to mourn the loss of two pairs of socks. People rarely ask me any follow-up questions... and usually slowly back away from me.

As much as I love the month of May, in some ways, I love June every bit as much. After all, it's hard to beat a month that has a holiday called National Chocolate Ice Cream Day (June 7th). I'd better put that date on my calendar before I forget. Looks like someone's not going to be able to make it into work that day.
