Thirsty Crow

On a very hot afternoon, a crow was flying in the sky. He was thirsty and was looking all around for water, but he could not find any. He kept on searching till he saw a water-pot. He went near the pot and looked into it. He was happy to see some water. But, it was at the bottom of the pot. He could not reach it. As, he was unable to drink the water, he looked around and saw some pebbles. He got an Idea. He picked up a pebble. He dropped it in the pot. He picked another pebble and dropped it in the pot. The water came up a little. He repeated the same, till the water came up to a height. He was happy as he could now reach the water. The crow then drank the water. He drank till he was no more thirsty. Then, he flew away merrily.

Writing Space
