Chamber looking for Citizen of the Year nominations

The Martin County Chamber of Commerce is once again looking for nominations for the Citizen of the Year.

Martin County has many citizens who do an outstanding job of representing our county, and these citizens should be recognized. Know someone who goes above and beyond to make Martin County a better place to live? Maybe someone who beautifies the county, volunteers as a coach, helps out neighbors in need, donates time to an organization, the list goes on? Oftentimes these people fly under the radar because they are not looking for recognition.

If you know someone who fits one or all of the above descriptions, why not nominate them for Martin County Citizen of the Year. Send your name and contact information along with the nominee's name, address, phone number and why you think they deserve to be Citizen of the Year. Return to Martin County Chamber of Commerce, PO Box 257 Loogootee, IN 47553.

The citizen of the year will be announced at the chamber of commerce's annual dinner scheduled for February 24.

He teaches a wilderness survival class at Vincennes University, is a NASP instructor and a member of Dover Hill Christian Union Church.

Even with the multitude of tasks and responsibilities Officer Doane continues to put out high numbers of activity. Cases in 2013 ranged from ginseng violations to catching shiners and everything in between.

District Seven Lt. Duane Englert states "Eric is not only an impressive officer he also is an impressive person. He is a pillar of our district and can always be counted on to perform his job at an exceptional level."

This is the third time Officer Doane has won the District Seven Officer of the Year award. He also won the award in 2004 and 2007 respectively. Being chosen for the award three times in less than ten years shows his consistency and dedication to protecting the natural resources of our state.

Sr. High School.

The Martin Circuit Court Administered Alcohol & Drug Program served more than 35 people during 2013. The program is self-supported by user fees paid by offenders participating in the program.

The court's participation in the IV-D Child Support Reimbursement Program during 2013 helped generate over $8,000. The funds were placed in the Martin County General Fund and used to fund whatever the county council deemed appropriate.

The CASA Program, initiated by the court in 2011, continues to grow and seek volunteers for the program. The program served eight families during 2013.

The court appointed pauper counsel defense attorneys to 184 persons during 2013. To offset the costs, the court continues to participate in the Supplemental Public Defender Reimbursement Program and collect reimbursements from bonds. In 2013, the court collected $18,678 in reimbursements. The court also entered into a contract for misdemeanor public representation. The goal of the contract is to provide excellent misdemeanor representation at a fixed cost to the county.

Judge Ellis was appointed to serve as special judge in Daviess, Dubois, Knox, and Pike counties on a total of 21 cases.

Reminders about winter weather driving

Indiana's next blast of winter weather is upon us. Warnings about hazardous driving conditions will be issued by city, county and state law enforcement as well as by local and national media. Many will heed the warnings. Many more will ignore the warnings. With another major storm approaching, the Martin County Sheriff's Department, again, remind motorists to limit travel when possible. If travel is not necessary, then stay home. Most calls for service received by the Martin County Sheriff's Department and other police agencies during winter storms are for crashes and motorists that slide off state roads and interstates. It is important to remember that snow and ice covered roads do not cause crashes. The crashes are caused by unsafe driving on the snow and ice covered roadway.

If you choose to drive during poor or hazardous driving conditions you must:

1. Leave sooner and expect your travel time to be twice as long as normal
2. Drive slower
3. Increase the following distance between you and the vehicle in front of you by at least five times greater than normal
4. Approach intersections with great care; other drivers not paying attention will slide through red lights
5. Signal all lane changes and turning movements

The posted speed limit may be more than twice as fast as the reduced speed drivers should travel to reduce the possibility of a collision or loss of control that puts a vehicle into a retaining wall, ditch or another motorist. Indiana code 9-21-5-1 specifies "Speed shall be restricted as necessary to avoid colliding with a person, vehicle, or other conveyance on, near or entering a highway." Motorists losing control of their vehicle or who are involved in a crash resulting in a police report should expect to be cited for this offense, which carries a maximum fine of $500.

If you are involved in a crash, are uninjured and all vehicles are drivable, involved drivers should move to a safe place completely off the road, be it the next exit or to the parking lot of a business to await law enforcement response for a police report. It is important to remember crashes involving injury or lane blockage receive priority attention ahead of property damage crashes. So, keep in mind, it may be an extended period of time before law enforcement arrives. The reason and purpose for moving drivable vehicles off the road is to avoid secondary crashes of other inattentive motorists crashing into your scene or side-swiping you if you've only moved to the side of the road.

Something else to keep in mind, crash scenes with vehicles disabled in the roadway and state police presence may have the state police vehicle facing the wrong way with emergency lights and headlights on. This is to warn approaching motorists of impending danger.

Remember, Indiana's Move Over Law states motorists MUST change lanes away from the emergency or utility vehicle if they can do it SAFELY. If not possible to move away from the emergency vehicle, motorists must SLOW DOWN and proceed with caution. Please give us room to work. We are asking motorists to SLOW DOWN and/or MOVE OVER WHEN SAFE TO DO SO.

Vehicles included in the Move Over law are:

- Police vehicles
- Ambulances
- Fire trucks and rescue equipment
- Highway incident-response vehicles
- Highway work vehicles-including snow plows
- Vehicle recovery equipment (tow trucks)

The point of not calling police agencies for road information during snow emergencies cannot be overstressed. Calling police departments about road conditions may delay action on critical life emergency 911 calls. Road conditions are likely the same for the area you want to know about as it is looking out your front window.

If you call for road conditions call the Indiana Department of Transportation's Road and Weather automated system at 800-262-7623 or visit the INDOT traffic map at <http://indot.carsprogram.org/main.jsf>. The 800 phone service is voice activated and updated with timely road conditions across Indiana. The INDOT web link allows users to check on specific locations for current closures and other road information.

In the Garden

By Ralph Purkhiser
Purdue University Master Gardener

Perhaps no genus of plants holds more intrigue in southern Indiana than the genus Cornus, commonly known as dogwood. The plants in this genus offer many uses in the garden and are the subject of myths and legends. No one is sure exactly how the plants became known as dogwoods. One explanation is that it was originally “dogwood” because the dense wood of the trees was commonly used for daggers.

Dogwood flowers are followed by fruits known as drapes. The drapes of many dogwoods are edible, but not all have a pleasant flavor. The drapes of some shrub dogwoods are mildly toxic to humans.

The most known dogwood is the “Cornus florida” or flowering dogwood. Festivals are held to celebrate the appearance of the clusters of tiny flowers surrounded by four bracts. In the wild, these bracts are usually white, but there are cultivars with pink and red bracts that are available for landscape plantings. They are, of course, native to much of the eastern portion of North America, but were greatly thinned out by disease a few years ago. Still, the woods of southern Indiana are white with dogwood flowers in late April or early May.

While flowering dogwoods rarely top forty feet, the Pacific dogwood of the far western United States may grow to heights of 75 feet. However, they lack the hardiness for Indiana, growing in zones 7-9.

When many cultivated dogwoods were killed by anthracnose and other diseases a few years ago, the Asian kousa dogwoods became more common. Various known as Korean dogwood, Chinese dogwood and Japanese dogwood, the kousa dogwoods offered greater disease resistance and also allowed dogwoods to grow in more sunny locations. The flowers and bracts of the kousa are similar to those of the flowering dogwood, but while the flowers of the flowering dogwood appear before the leaves, the kousa sets flowers later, after the tree has leafed out. In Asia, the kousa is considered an orchard tree, grown for its fruit, which resembles a large red raspberry.

Another imported dogwood grown for its fruit is the Cornelian cherry, native to southern Europe and parts of Asia. One of the first trees to flower in the spring, the drapes of this dogwood are gathered after they fall from the tree and made into preserves, syrups, liqueurs and wines.

While the flowering dogwood is the most common dogwood found in Indiana, it is not the only native. Pagoda dogwoods are more common in the southeast, but may be found in the state. The limbs and leaves of this dogwood appear in layers, creating the illusion of a pagoda. Pagodas are prized for bonsai specimens.

Not all dogwoods are trees. Some take the form of shrubs and even sub-shrubs. The swamp or gray dogwood is found in low-lying areas. Its flowers appear in clusters called cymes. Other shrubs include the red osier dogwood and the yellow-twig dogwood, often grown in the landscape for the bright colors of the young stems in fall and winter. Breeding has produced varieties that also offer pink and orange twigs. The rough leaf dogwood and stiff dogwood are also shrub types. They may spread by suckers and form large colonies.

The shortest of the dogwoods are the sub-shrub or groundcover types. There are a couple of species of sub-shrub dogwoods, both commonly called bunchberries. The flowers and bracts look like miniatures of the flowering dogwood.

Besides the beauty that dogwoods supply in the woods and our landscapes, the dogwood has also been known for its medicinal value. The fruits of the edible varieties are high in vitamin C and antioxidants. The bark is high in tannins and a tea made from the bark has been used to treat malaria and other fevers. Civil War soldiers used the leaves of dogwoods in poultices to cover wounds.

Most dogwood species are available at nurseries. Some of the tree varieties may carry hefty price tags, but are probably worth the investment. I discourage digging trees from the woods, but collecting seeds from the drapes in the fall is an acceptable alternative.

Hoosier students learn archery in schools

Indiana Conservation Officers have introduced Hoosier schools to a new discipline – target archery. The National Archery in the Schools Program (NASP) is being taught as part of the physical education curriculum in more than 300 Indiana schools and is affecting more than 50,000 students annually.

The DNR Law Enforcement Division has certified more than 800 teachers as NASP instructors. Students participate by shooting a Genesis compound bow at an international competition scoring target.

Students are given an opportunity to join competitive archery teams to represent their schools at tournaments across the state.

“NASP has created an opportunity for anyone to join a team and compete at a high level,” said Outdoor Education Lt. Larry Morrison. “Archery teaches concentration, poise, relaxation and commitment to practice, which translates to a better student in the classroom.”

Indianapolis Public Schools will feature more than 260 students competing at the second annual IPS NASP qualifying tournament on March 8 at John Marshall Community High School from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. The tournament is open to the public. Admission is charged.

“About 2,200 competitive shooters statewide are attempting to qualify for one of the 1,600 spots at this year’s State NASP tournament,” said Outdoor Education Coordinator Tim Beck.

The Indiana State NASP tournament will be at the Indiana State Fairgrounds Champions Pavilion on March 22.

Grazing Bites

By Victor Shelton
NRCS State Agronomist/Grazing Specialist

I am glad that winters like this don’t come around too often. Memories of the winter of 1977-78 seem too familiar again; a slightly real Deja vu! It takes a winter as cold as this to remind me of why we build some things the way we do. Number one, burying pipeline deep enough not to freeze. Most years, I rarely see the ground frozen very deep at all, quite often just a few inches. That depth of freezing is highly influenced of course by the temperatures that are occurring, the duration of them, but also by cover. Bare soil, rocky areas, or soil with no insulation value on it, certainly will freeze deeper than soil that has some kind of “blanket.” That blanket is usually good sod; the heavier the sod, the higher the insulation value and the shallower the freeze line. Snow can also have some decent insulation values, but snow may or may not happen and be present when really needed.

I generally try not to dig in the ground in the middle of the winter, especially if the wind chill can freeze your spit before it hits the ground. Luckily, I’ve not had to do that...yet, but I have found the temperature limitations of my old pump house. Pipelines need to be installed below the freeze line, not the average freeze line (depth), but the potential freeze line.

I’ve not dug down to see just how deep we are frozen right now. I’m curious, but not quite that curious. NRCS Soil Scientist Steve Wade recently told me that he had seen some sandy soils frozen down to 14 inches with some cover in central Daviess County. I’ll take his word for it. With good cover and short durations, the freeze line should be less than 12 inches. No cover, and depending on where you are located, it could easily be approaching 30 inches or more. “Frost” levels could be even deeper, which is a good reason to keep pipelines a minimum of 36 inches deep or deeper north of I-70 and 30 inches or deeper south of I-70. Shallow lines, and I have a few, should be designed to be drained during the coldest months. This can be accomplished by gravity in some cases or blown out with an adapted air valve.

All-weather tanks such as “ball” tanks or heated tanks are great for extending the grazing season out in the field and for winter feeding areas. These tanks often indicate that they can handle more than fifty cows (2-ball) or something similar. These are sized (cow numbers) based on feedlot conditions, not for open pasture with long walking distances. Trying to utilize only this type of tank in the summer with more than eight hundred feet of walking distance is going to leave you with some unhappy cows, just not enough drinking space.

Most non-electric type tanks are well insulated above ground and rely somewhat on a geo-tube to help keep the tank from freezing solid. The geo-tube is usually made of thick polyethylene plastic or very dense strong foam and is placed from under the tank down to four feet or more in the ground. This allows heat in the ground to rise up through the tube and help maintain warmer temperatures within the tank. Pipes to the tank are normally run within this tube to also protect them from freezing. It is amazing how well some of these work.

Heated tanks also work very well, but of course require electricity, which can be a feat in itself. When choosing a heated unit, pay careful attention to what it will take to replace the heating element, which do tend to need to be replaced over time...some are easier to replace than others.

There are some gadgets out there that read the air temperature and when cold enough open up a valve to let a tiny stream of water flow freely or create a small spray. This keeps water somewhat “flowing” or moving and flowing water is less likely to freeze. These are best used on tanks with overflow pipes built in to keep the tanks from overflowing and creating a major mess or new resource concern. The overflow pipe generally goes underground to an outlet at a stable area away from the permanent tank. It also then helps keep the cows from using the area around the tank as a skating ring.

One of the more familiar tank systems with an overflow are tanks associated with spring developments. Natural springs occur where you have areas in the landscape where water from higher reservoirs find an outlet of least resistance and flow that direction. Springs are susceptible to contamination and seasonal changes in flow rate, but can be a very reliable and relatively inexpensive source of high quality soft drinking water if they are developed and maintained properly. Spring developments also make really great winter watering systems because water is constantly flowing through them keeping them open and fresh.

Most livestock prefer water between the temperatures of 37 and 65 degrees Fahrenheit. Honestly, that is about the same range I think I also prefer. When the water temperature deviates very much beyond this range intake is reduced. Being too hot is certainly more of an issue than being too cold which needs no explanation.

Cows will consume a fair amount of snow, especially if they are grazing stockpiled forages or winter annuals covered with it. Could it be the only source of water in some cases? This is a good question and the answer would probably begin with the words, “it depends.” The moisture content of what the cattle are grazing and their personal water needs play a big part here, with dry cows probably most likely able to do it. But, if water is available...I’ve never seen them turn it down which tells me they still prefer to be able to drink some, and liquid water (or warmer water) utilized won’t require as much energy.

Spring will come; we just need to be patient. Keep on grazing!

Indiana is first in the nation with certified, tested ePollBooks

Indiana Secretary of State Connie Lawson announced last Wednesday that three electronic poll book systems (ePollBooks) have been certified for use in Indiana elections. The vendors with approved ePollBooks are Decision Support, Hart InterCivic and Election Systems and Software.

"Indiana is the first state in the nation to develop standards for this new frontier of technology," said Secretary Lawson. "We have become leaders in modernizing the electoral process. First, we gave every county the option to use ePollBooks and now we are protecting Hoosier voters as they sign-in by ensuring only the best quality ePollBooks are used in Indiana."

The new ePollBook system is an electronic, modernized version of the traditional paper poll list, which has been used for decades. With traditional paper poll lists, poll workers compare a voter's ID with the names on the list before issuing a ballot. The voter then signs the list next to their name and indicates whether or not the voter's address has changed.

House passes bill promoting entrepreneurship

State Representative Mark Messmer (R-Jasper) has authored a piece of legislation to further promote entrepreneurship in young Hoosiers. Yesterday, House Bill (HB) 1332 passed the Indiana House of Representatives with a unanimous vote.

HB 1332 combines several pro-entrepreneurship efforts and organizations into a single organization, known as the Office of Small Business and Entrepreneurship (OSBE), an organization under the direction of the lieutenant governor. It also extends the young entrepreneurship program by two years.

"This organization will help focus many of the programs created in past years under one umbrella," said Rep. Messmer. "This will not only simplify and consolidate our existing efforts, but also further encourage entrepreneurship and innovation in the future. For the most part, our small businesses simply want the government to leave them alone, however this legislation will truly benefit small business throughout the state

NSWC Crane leading collaboration in radiation effects research

Naval Surface Warfare Center, Crane Division (NSWC Crane) is spearheading collaboration with laboratories and universities across the country in radiation effects research by advancing their Naval Innovative Science and Engineering (NISE/219) Program.

The NISE/219 Program sponsored by the Office of Naval Research was created to provide means for laboratory directors to fund initiatives that directly support defense missions and provide enhancements for the science and engineering workforce. NSWC Crane has placed a concerted effort in advancing technologies associated with radiation effects research bolstering their capability to support the critical trusted electronics required for the nation's strategic deterrence programs.

"We are striving to be Navy's national leaders in radiation effects research and collaborating with universities and laboratories to support a critical need of our customer," said Brad Secrest, NSWC Crane's Joint Mission Office Director for Strategic Missions. "Radiation effects technology advancements are essential to providing fully reliable advanced electronics solutions for the strategic deterrent systems."

NSWC Crane has designated almost $1M dollars in research funding over the past three years to radiation effects research. Scientists and engineers at Crane have collaborated with Naval Research Laboratory, Air Force Research Laboratory, Department of Energy, NASA, John Hopkins Applied Physics Lab

The new ePollBooks will scan the bar code on the back of a voter's driver's license to permit poll workers to efficiently locate the voter's record and to ensure the voter gets the correct ballot. The voter will then sign an electronic signature pad.

"The ePollBook has been used in Indiana in since the 2007 vote center pilot program," said Secretary Lawson. "Now, all counties have the option to use ePollBooks. Statewide standards will help county officials make sure they purchase the best equipment and give Hoosier voters confidence in their counties election equipment."

The Indiana standards used to test and certify the approved ePollBooks were developed by Ball State University political and computer scientists and are being considered as a model for other states. Pennsylvania and Virginia have already asked for more information about Indiana's new standards.

Information concerning all ePollBook systems that have applied for certification will be published at www.in.gov/elections as additional information becomes available.

by focusing on their needs."

The OSBE will put a focus on small business needs such as specialty programming and business consulting, in addition to integrating universities, private sector business and government stakeholders.

"As a small business advocate, my number one goal is to make Indiana the best place in the country to start and grow a business," said Rep. Messmer. "The offices that the lieutenant governor already oversees currently provide outreach and opportunities for Indiana small businesses, but by adding OSBE to the Lt. Governor's Family of Business, we will be able to foster greater capacity building for individuals and their communities."

Next, HB 1332 will move to the state Senate for further debate and discussion. If it is passed in the Senate and the governor signs it into law, it will take effect on May 1, 2014.

and Los Alamos National labs and academia to produce over 20 papers published in peer journals and presented at conferences to date. In addition to the publications, Crane inventors have disclosed or received four patents as a result of their research.

NSWC Crane has already witnessed their research efforts advancing into an applied research application. One paper entitled, "Effect of Accumulated Charge on the Total Ionizing Dose Response of a NAND Flash Memory," was nominated for best paper at the 2012 Nuclear and Space Radiation Effects Conference. As a result of that research and resulting patent, this capability is currently being utilized in a GPS satellite being designed by a national lab.

"The NISE program and our focused efforts in radiation effects helps sustain Crane as a premier Warfare Center," said Ben Harkness, Global Deterrence and Defense Department Director. "Our projects serve as an excellent opportunity to engage the research community and other academic experts in highly relevant and meaningful research aligned to benefit the Navy and our Strategic Missions customers."

NSWC Crane is a naval laboratory and a field activity of Naval Sea Systems Command (NAVSEA) with focus areas in Special Missions, Strategic Missions and Electronic Warfare/Information Operations. The Warfare Center's research and development efforts support the Warfighter by providing capabilities and resources to advance technologies for the military.

The Messmer Report

By District 63 State Representative
Mark Messmer

Approaching the halfway point

While I'm in session during the week until mid-March, I want to make sure to stay connected to my constituents and keep everyone informed of the legislative proceedings. It would be impossible to share with you every bill that we have discussed, but I would like to pick a couple that I think not only apply to our district but are also interesting.

One of those bills is House Bill (HB) 1052, a bill which I authored concerning the development around military bases. This is particularly important in our district because we are home to the Crane Naval Surface Warfare Center. HB 1052 passed the House on 2nd reading on Thursday with no amendments and will be up for a final vote on Monday.

This bill expands the definition of "military base" to include the Glendora Lake Test Facility in Sullivan County. Crane uses this facility for missile tests and other important functions. By adding the lake to the definition of "military base," this means that before a local government unit can take action concerning planning or zoning within three miles of the perimeter of the lake, they must first notify the base's commander.

This provides Crane an opportunity to preempt any actions by a local government which would impede their ability to operate the base. Crane provides our state with many jobs and contributes more than $2 million to the Hoosier economy every day. This expansion would allow Indiana to grow its defense industry and add more defense jobs.

Another bill that I would like to share with you is HB 1351, which passed out of the House on Tuesday and will now be discussed further in the Senate. HB 1351 is a multi-pronged approach to addressing entitlement reform in Indiana.

The first thing this bill would do is require a county office to administer a written or electronic substance abuse exam, known as the Substance Abuse Subtle Screen Inventory (SASSI) test, to all Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) recipients. If the county office considers an individual to have reasonable suspicion of illegally using a controlled substance, they would then be placed into a separate group for further testing. Fifty percent of that group is then randomly selected to take a drug examination.

If they test positive for illegal substances, they can continue to receive benefits only if they enroll in a substance abuse treatment program. However, if they do not test clean while in treatment, their benefits will be removed for a total of three months. It is still important that we look out for children in these situations and that they are being raised in safe environments. If benefits are removed from a household with children, those benefits can be transferred to a different legal guardian.

The second thing this bill would do is place new restrictions on what foods and drinks can be purchased using Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits. Individuals will only be able to purchase items of sufficient nutritional value such as fruits and vegetables. Because SNAP is a federal program, these changes must first be approved by the federal government via a waiver.

The final thing that this bill would do is require the Department of Workforce Development (DWD) to study topics related to long-term unemployment issues. The DWD would then submit a report to the Legislative Council and the Unemployment Insurance Oversight Committee with their findings.

HB 1351 is a win-win because it will put more Hoosiers back into the workforce, thus boosting our economy, and should ultimately lead to less Hoosiers depending on entitlement benefits.

I will continue to provide updates throughout session. Please do not hesitate to call me at 317-232-9620 or email me via h63@iga.in.gov if you have any questions on these bills or other pertinent matters.

Rep. Messmer (R-Jasper) represents portions of Daviess, Dubois, Pike and Martin counties.

Farm winery legislation passes the Indiana House

State Representative Mark Messmer (R-Jasper) authored a bill to remove a barrier to small winery businesses in Indiana. House Bill (HB) 1387 passed the House of Representatives Monday with a vote of 94-1.

HB 1387 allows small wineries to sell up to 5,000 gallons of wine directly to retailers within the same county, or a county contiguous to that county.

From 1971-2006, Indiana's farm wineries had the ability for unlimited self-distribution of their product. However, in 2006, the General Assembly passed a law prohibiting them from self-distributing any of their product. Removing this barrier brings fairness between Indiana's farm wineries and the privileges already enjoyed by Indiana micro-breweries.

"It has always been a priority for me to address the burdens on small businesses, and increase economic development in our state. This bill could potentially support further growth of Indiana's farm wineries and attract additional tourism and more revenue to local communities," said Rep. Messmer.

The bill will now be considered by the Senate.

Vectren gas infrastructure replacement plans: Consumer comments on anticipated rate increases invited

The Indiana Office of Utility Consumer Counselor (OUCC) is inviting written consumer comments on Vectren Energy Delivery's plans for natural gas transmission, distribution and storage system improvements. This includes Vectren's request for incremental gas rate increases to recover the costs as the projects proceed over the next seven years, through a new rate adjustment mechanism. Vectren's proposals include a $647 million plan for its North territory and a $217 million plan for its South territory.

The OUCC – the state agency representing consumer interests in cases before the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission (IURC) – is reviewing the utility's plans and has not yet taken a position in the pending case. The OUCC anticipates completing its review and filing testimony on March 7, 2014.

Vectren has filed its requests under two state laws: 1) A law approved by the Indiana General Assembly in 2011 (IC 8-1-8.4) that allows energy utilities to recover federally mandated costs through rates, and 2) A 2013 law (IC 8-1-39) allowing natural gas and electric utilities to submit seven-year infrastructure improvement plans for IURC approval. The 2013 law allows utilities to then seek rate increases every six months – subject to IURC and OUCC review – to recover project costs under their plans as they are incurred. Recovery under the 2013 law is referred to in statute as the "Transmission, Distribution, and Storage System Improvement Charge (TDSIC)." A utility may recover 80 percent of the incurred costs through the adjustments while deferring the remaining 20 percent to its next base rate case, which must be filed by the end of the seven-year period.

In IURC Cause No. 44429, Vectren proposes to create a new Compliance System and Improvement Adjustment (CSIA) to recover costs under the two laws, and states that it plans to file its first CSIA rate increase requests in September 2014.

According to the utility's testimony, the proposed projects throughout its North and South service territories would start later this year.

Projects would include main replacements and upgrades to transmission and distribution pipelines. The Vectren North plan would also include extensions into areas that currently do not have natural gas service.

The seven-year plan for the Vectren North service territory – which includes about 570,000 customers in 48 central, south-central and southeastern Indiana counties formerly served by Indiana Gas Co. – includes a total of $647.1 million in capital improvement projects. This total includes $369.7 million under the federal mandate law and $277.4 million in TDSIC rate recovery.

The seven-year plan for the Vectren South service territory – which includes approximately 110,000 customers in nine southwestern Indiana counties formerly served by Southern Indiana Gas & Electric Co. (SIGECO) – includes a total of $216.8 million in capital improvement projects. This total includes $173.7 million under the federal mandate law and $43.1 million in TDSIC rate recovery.

In its testimony and exhibits, the utility projects that the TDSIC portion of the CSIA would raise an average residential customers' monthly bill – in the first year – by $0.97 in the North territory and $1.34 in the South territory. Larger increases would ensue each year through 2021.

This proposal would not affect service or rates for Vectren's electric utility in southwestern Indiana.

Cast members of "The Glass Menagerie" are Sam Warren (on floor), Quentin Toetz, Danielle Ferguson, and Hannah Simpson.

Williams' poetic masterpiece. A faded, tragic remnant of Southern gentility, Amanda Wingfield desperately struggles to provide her shy and fragile daughter with at least one suitable "gentleman caller." Her son Tom dreams of escaping from his job at a warehouse and his oppressive life at home. "The Glass Menagerie" is a drama of great tenderness, charm, and beauty and is one of the most famous plays of the modern theatre. Originally produced on Broadway in 1945, it has shown huge success then and now with the new Broadway revival currently taking audiences by storm.
