For referring offices

When to consider a referral

Consider low vision care when vision loss interferes with daily activities despite usual correction or treatment. Patients do not need to wait until vision loss is severe to discuss rehabilitation.

Start with a phone call

The first step is a free telephone consultation with Dr. Pierre to discuss the patient's goals and whether low vision care may help. Call 936-569-2015 to arrange the consultation and secure transfer of recent eye records.

Low vision rehabilitation complements ongoing care for eye disease. Patients should continue visits with their treating optometrist, ophthalmologist, or retina specialist.

Your vision. Your goals.

What is low vision?

Low vision is lasting vision loss that makes everyday tasks difficult, even with regular glasses, contact lenses, or usual treatment. Rehabilitation focuses on practical ways to use remaining vision.

What would you like to do?

Read mail or a favorite book.
See faces or watch television.
Use a phone or computer.
Enjoy hobbies and daily routines.

Options to explore

Depending on your needs, options may include specialized glasses, magnifiers, telescopes, electronic tools, lighting changes, and strategies for managing glare and contrast.

The goal is better function. Results vary; rehabilitation does not cure the underlying eye condition.

KING VISION / LOW VISION CARE

Start with a conversation

1. Free telephone consultation

Dr. Pierre will discuss your vision concerns, the activities you want to do more easily, and whether low vision care may help.

2. An evaluation, if appropriate

If low vision care may help, the next step is an in-person evaluation to assess your vision and explore tools and strategies matched to your goals.

Bring to your evaluation

Current glasses and vision aids.
Your medication list and eye records.
A book, phone, or sample task.
A support person.
