

However, the Government did finally decide that as other countries were building aircraft and training airmen, they should do the same in case of war.

So an aviator named Frank McClean offered them the use of his planes which had been built by the Short Brothers for these early flying lessons.

