

In addition, RAF Eastchurch continued to be important in developing and testing new aircraft and also new equipment before, during and for a short time after the end of WW2. It was also home to 266 Squadron during the Battle of Britain.

