A Miami native, Casey's passions have been shaped by Florida ecology from an early age. She attended Alexander Montessori School before graduating from Ransom Everglades in 2015 where she found her calling: environmental conservation. Casey spent most of her early years playing in the mangrove forests and befriending local fauna, much to the chagrin of her mother. Casey's affinity for the ocean was cemented at 10 when her father encouraged her to become SCUBA certified. Her fascination with marine life led her to become a SCUBA instructor, where she continues to share her love of the ocean with others. Her commitment to service and leadership was a prominent part of her early life, from Girl Scouts where she earned her Gold Award to her academic career where she served as president of S.E.A. club at Ransom Everglades and spent many semesters working as Stage Manager for both the upper and lower campuses.

After high school, Casey started at Clemson University where she began working on a Bachelor of Science in Environmental and Natural Resources specializing in Conservation Biology. After a year and a half at Clemson, she moved home to Miami for a year where she attended the University of Miami. At UM she pledged Alpha Delta Pi and was initiated in 2017 by her mother, Isabelle Wheeler (ADPi).

Casey has since moved to Texas where she founded Maverick's House, a pet hotel and foster home. On top of juggling her academic aspirations, Casey works as an executive assistant at Wheeler Consulting LLC and continues her work as a SCUBA instructor.

When she isn't working or studying, Casey spends much of her time managing the small zoo she has amassed since her childhood. She is a foster mother for the local animal shelter, and often has at least one litter of kittens on top of her own fur (and scale) babies. Her other passions include fitness, philanthropy, and family; she is currently training to run her first half marathon next summer.
