

Look familiar?

Longhorn Cowfish

This friendly, extroverted fish is easy to spot with its long horns. It tends to be very social and sometimes even appears to pose for photos in aquariums. To get food, it blows into the sand to uncover food such as small worms.

A member of the boxfish family, it can excrete a toxin that usually keeps predators from eating it. It can be found living in the Red Sea and tropical Indo-Pacific.

