

Look familiar?

Clown Triggerfish

A more introverted fish, the Clown triggerfish is generally shy and solitary. When it feels threatened, it uses its trigger fin and mouth to lock itself into small openings for safety. It is also one of the few fish that can swim backwards. You can find it living in coral reefs in the Indian and Pacific Oceans.

