

Why Would Someone Want a "Tiny Home"?

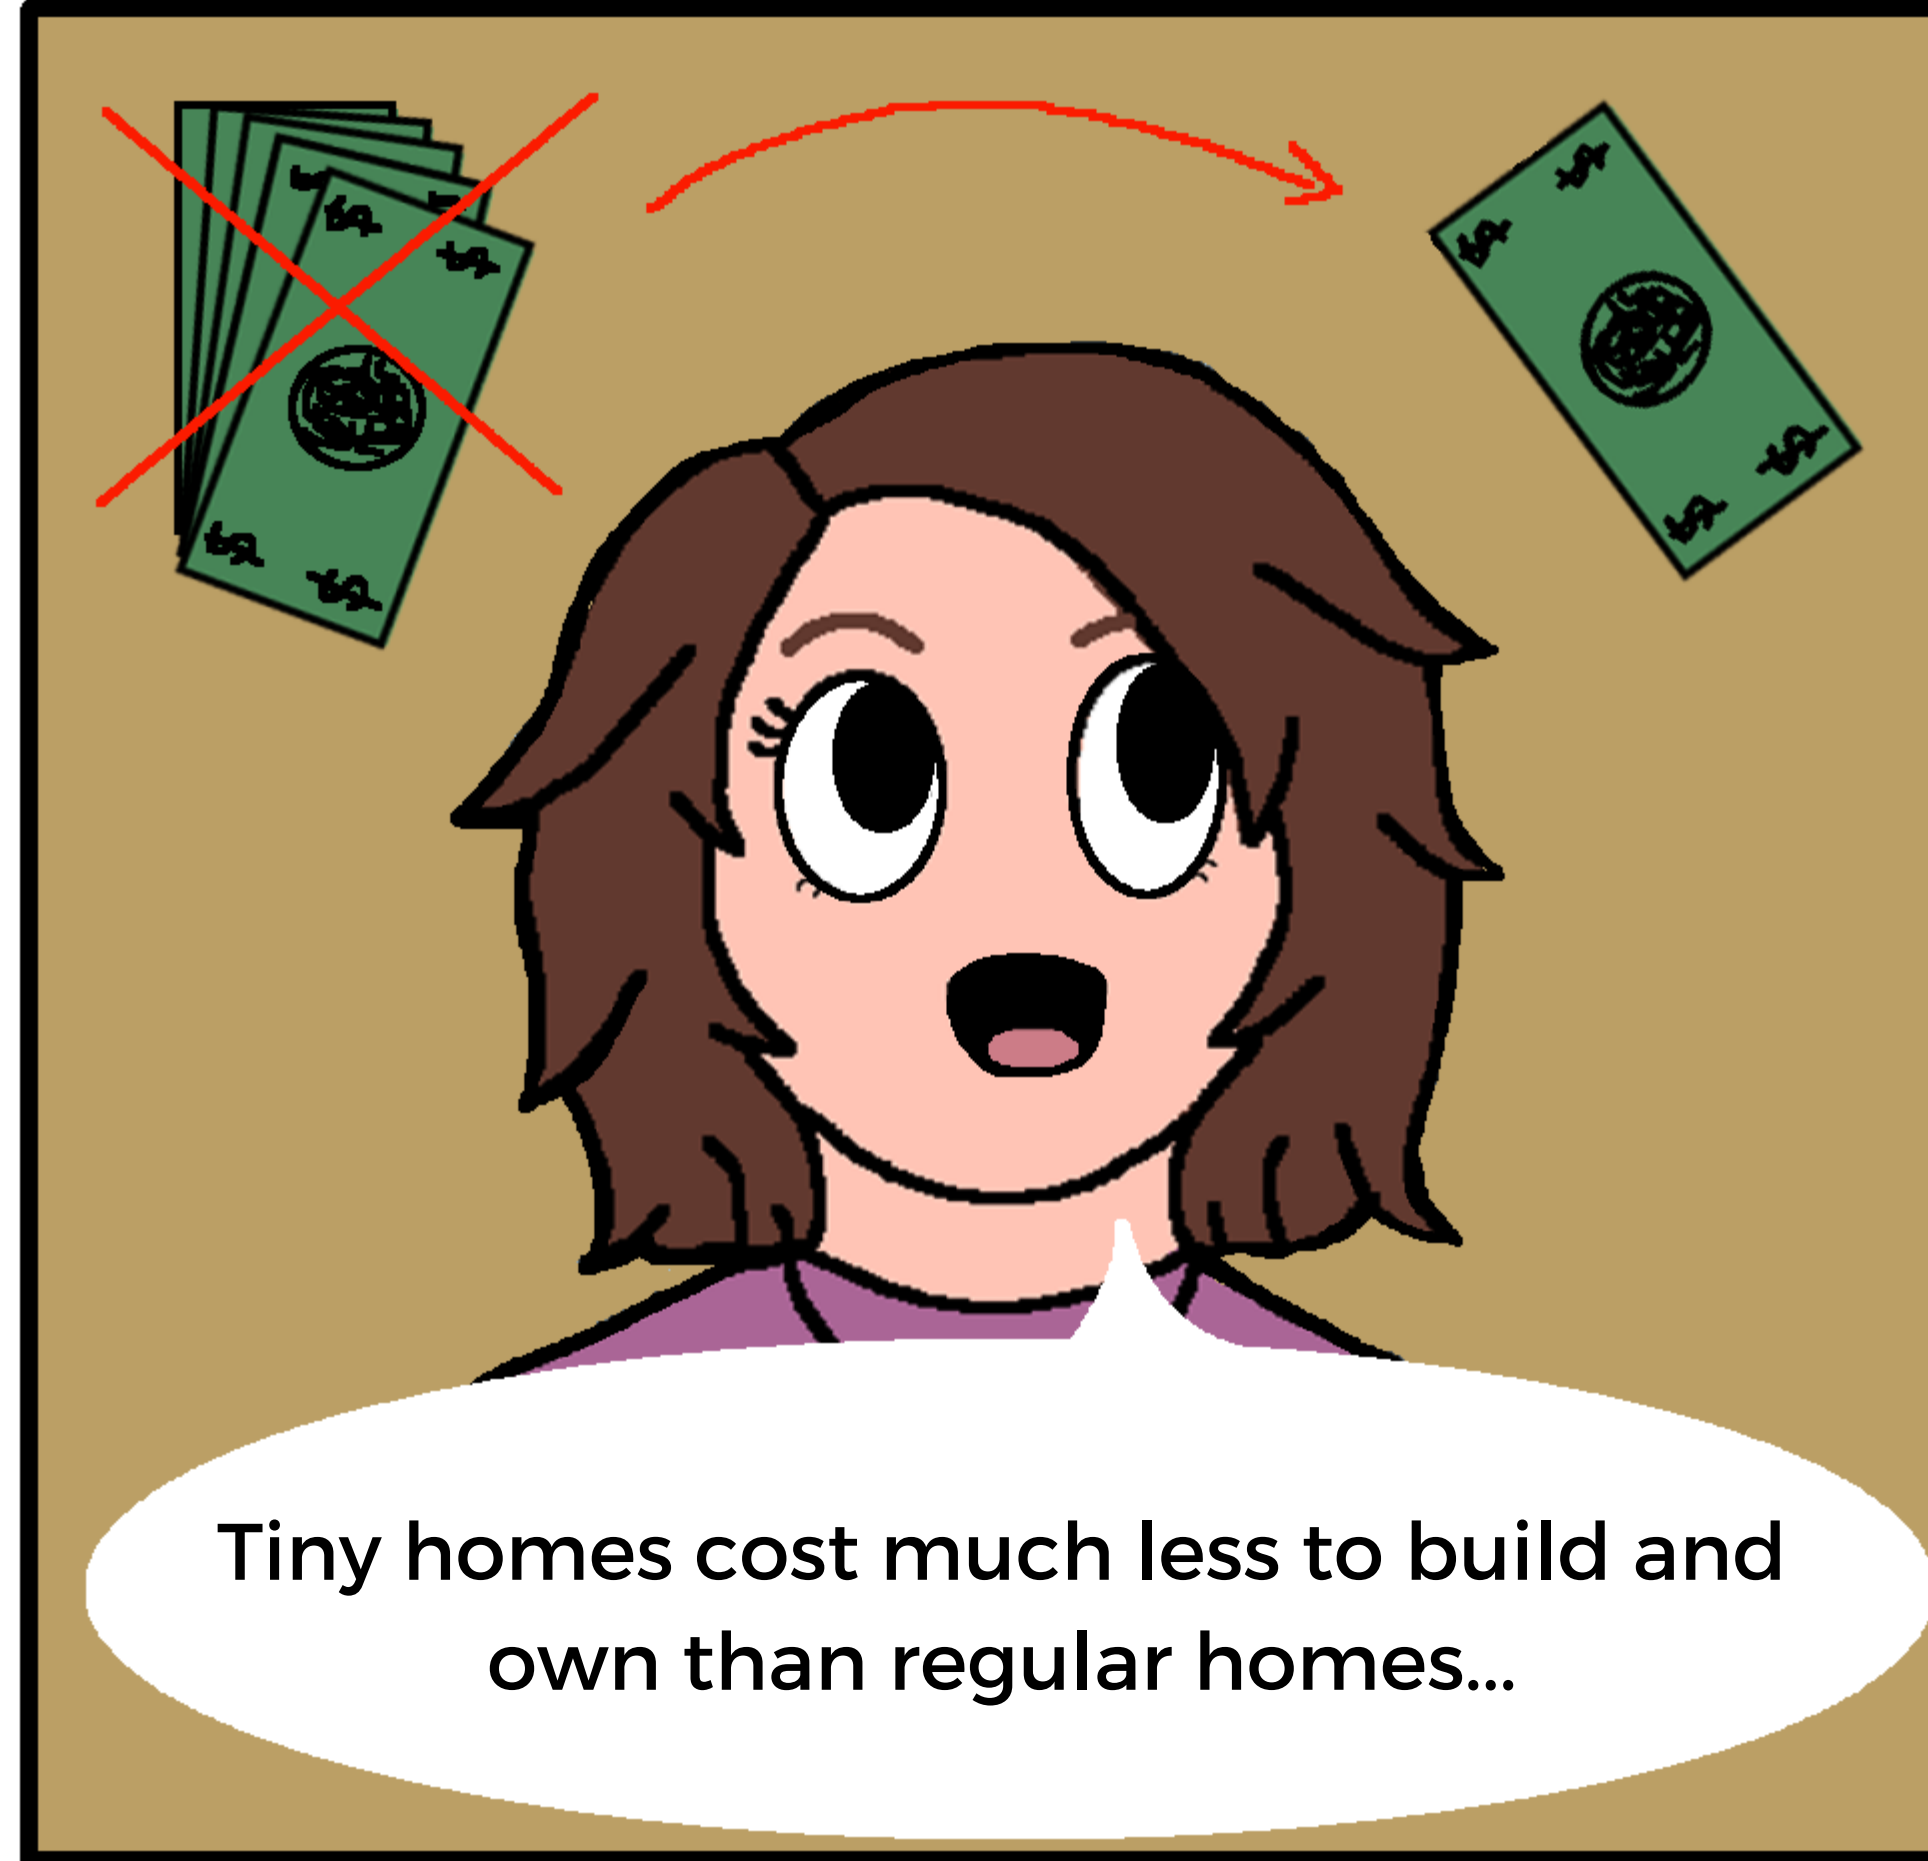

Regular Home

Tiny Home

Although most people dream of living in big, spacious homes...some people would rather live in a tiny home!

This panel shows two circular images. The top-left image shows a large, two-story house with many windows, labeled "Regular Home". The bottom-right image shows a small, single-story house with a few windows, labeled "Tiny Home". A speech bubble at the bottom explains that while many people prefer large homes, some prefer tiny homes.

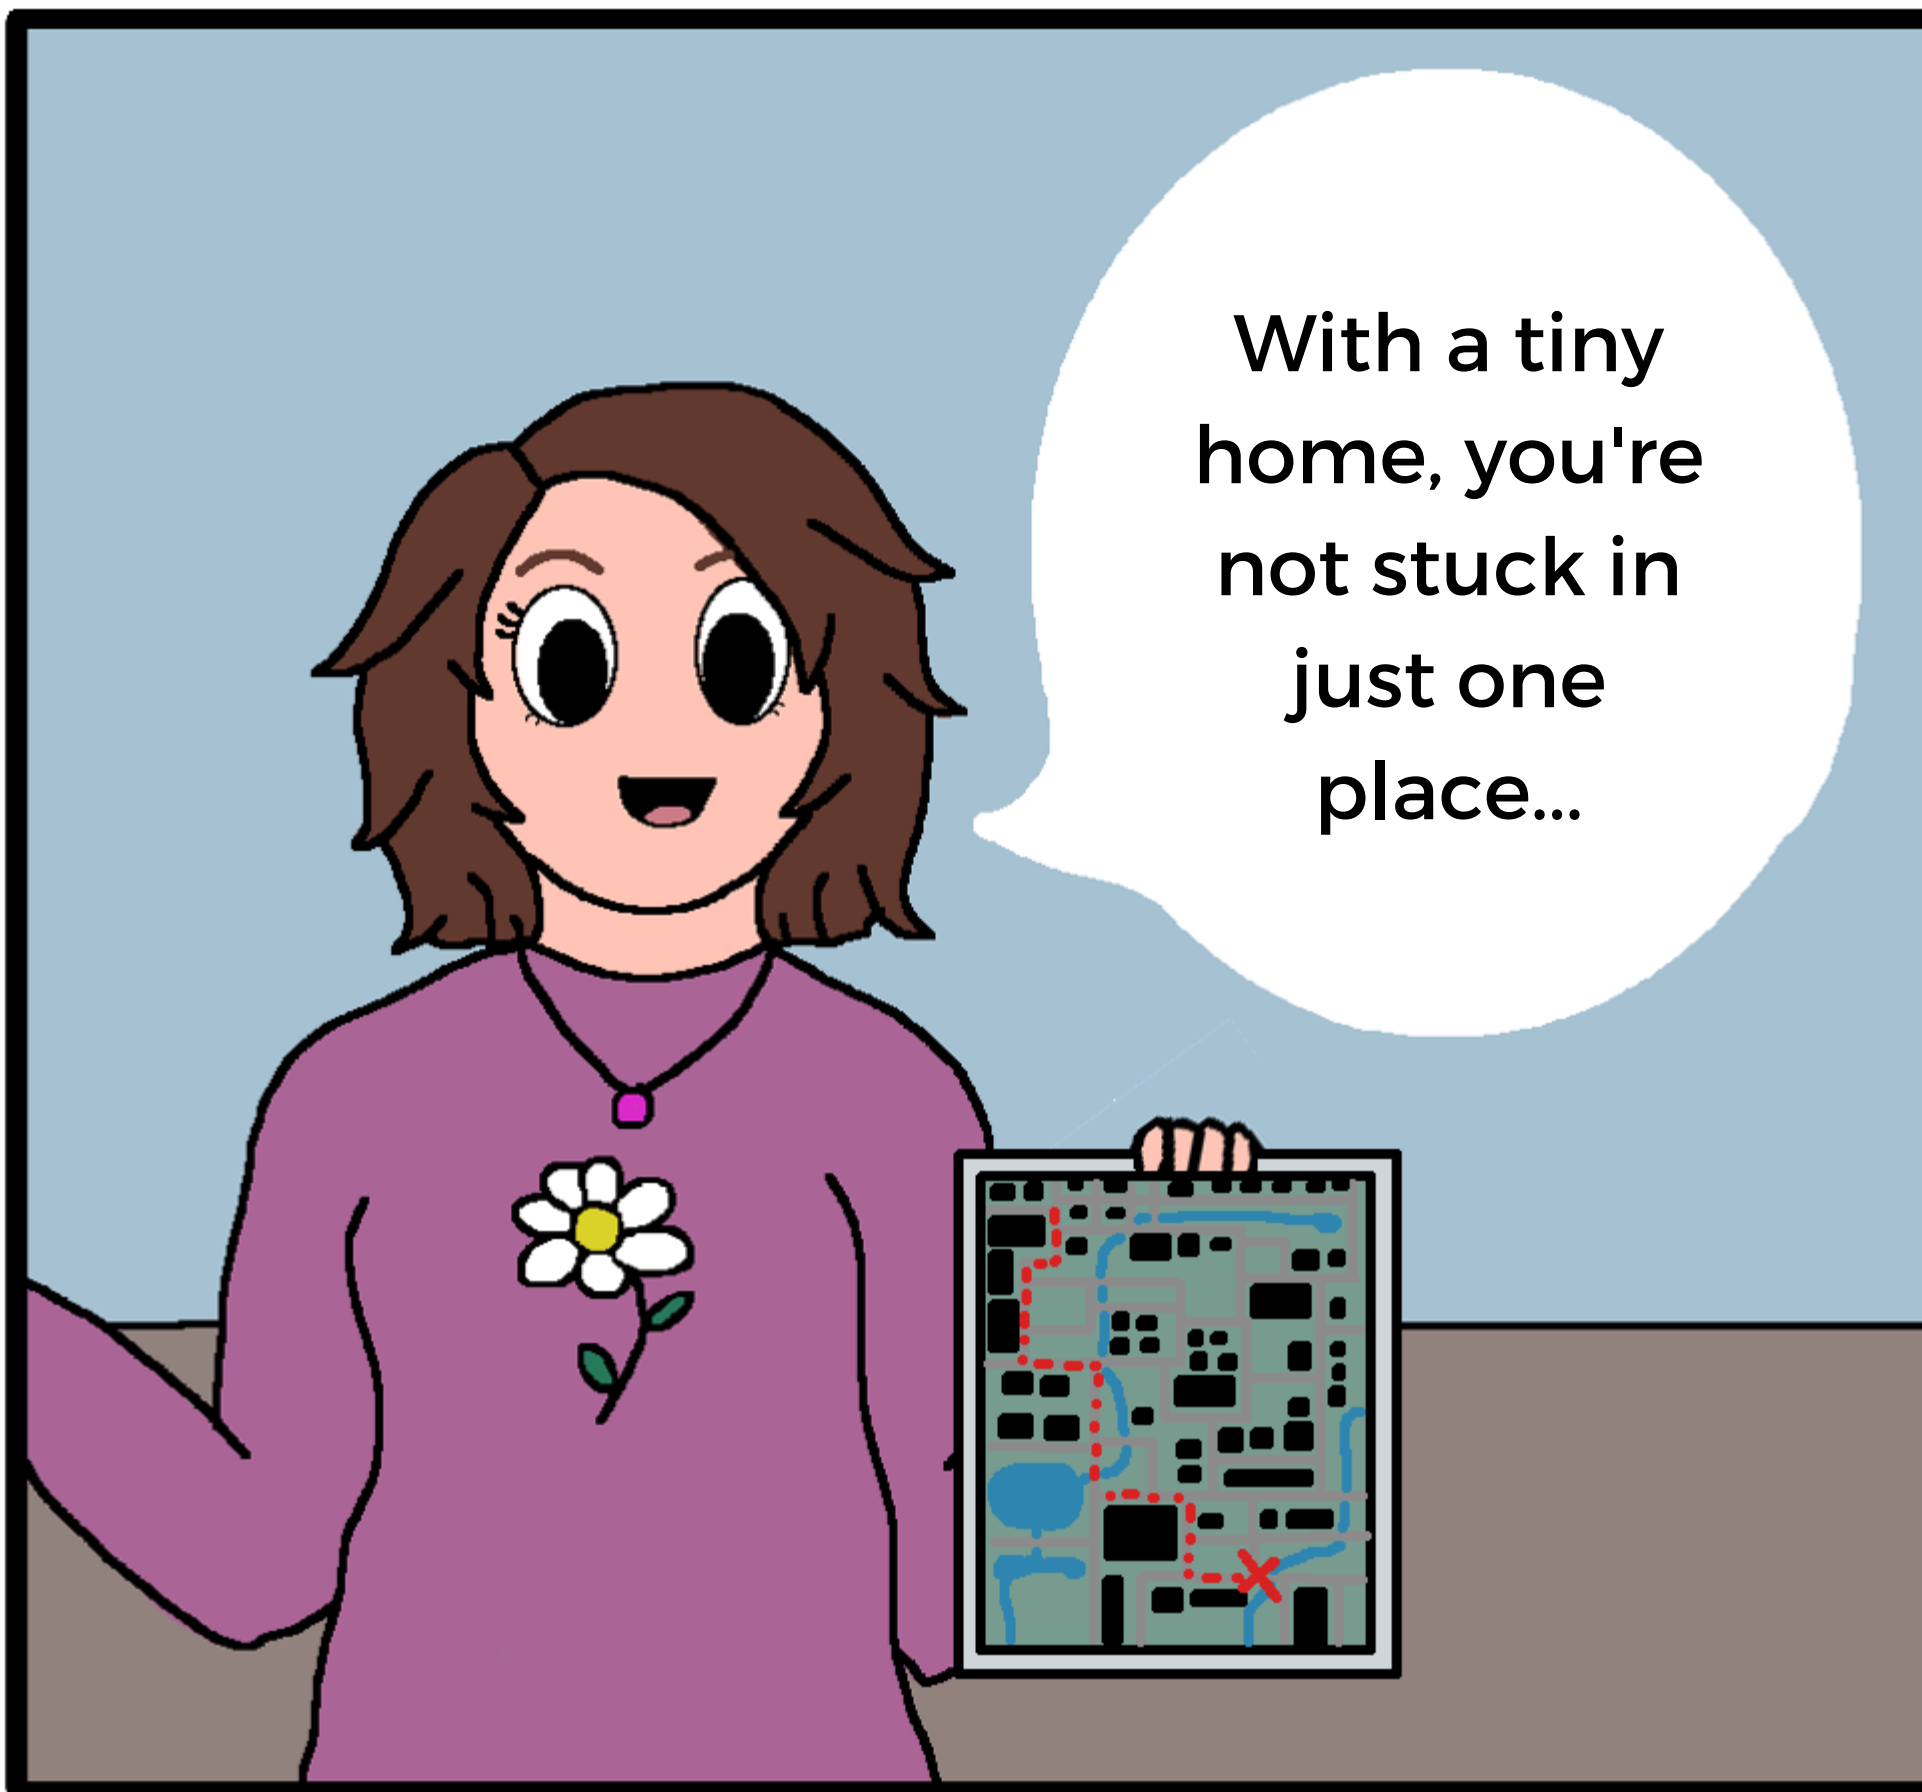

Tiny homes cost much less to build and own than regular homes...

A woman with brown hair and a purple shirt looks surprised. Above her head, a stack of money is crossed out with a red 'X', and a single bill is shown with a red arrow pointing towards it, indicating a cost reduction.

...and since they take less energy to heat or cool, tiny homes are also better for the environment!

A tiny home is shown next to a thermometer with a red liquid level, indicating temperature. A speech bubble explains that tiny homes are better for the environment due to lower energy requirements.

With a tiny home, you're not stuck in just one place...

A woman in a purple shirt holds a map of a city grid. A speech bubble explains that tiny homes offer mobility.

...you can have it moved to wherever you want to live next!

A tiny home is shown on a trailer being pulled by a truck. A speech bubble explains that tiny homes can be moved to new locations.

For people who prefer a smaller, cozier home with less stuff, a tiny home can truly be a dream!

A woman with brown hair smiles happily. The background is decorated with pink hearts. A speech bubble explains that tiny homes can be a dream for those who prefer smaller, simpler living.
