THE ANNOUNCER!

God is compassionate and, in His love, He saves us. He has chosen us in His love, not just for our salvation, but that through us others will come to have salvation. He calls the imperfect and empowers them to share the grace and salvation with their brothers and sisters who are also imperfect. In the first reading from Exodus, we hear God speaking to the people of Israel after bringing them out of Egypt. He reminds them of what He has done, bearing them up like an eagle's wings and bringing them to the promised land. God then gives them a calling to be His special possession, a holy nation and kingdom of priests. God chose them for a purpose, to be his own and reflect His presence in the world. This is a pointer to our own Christian calling. The second reading from St. Paul's Letter to the Romans deepens this message about how God loves and saves us and has given us a purpose. "While we were still weak, Christ died for the ungodly." God did not wait for us to be perfect to love us, but loved us in our weakness, sin, and brokenness, and gave us Christ, His son.

In the gospel, we see the image of Jesus who is full of compassion for our helpless state. We are all like the crowd, troubled and abandoned, like sheep without a shepherd. He came to be our shepherd but recognised the need for more shepherds like Him. Thus, He called His twelve disciples and gave them authority to liberate and heal all nations from the clutches of the unclean spirits.

The world today is still full of people who are "troubled and abandoned," searching for meaning and direction. Jesus, who feels with the world and her need for direction, healing and hope, chooses not to do it alone, but to involve His chosen people in that mission of healing and restoration. We have received salvation without paying, and we should pass that grace to others without pay. We may feel unprepared or unworthy, but so were the first disciples. What made the difference was not their strength, but their willingness to respond to the mission.
